—S. 533—Scope—Confession — Certificate of voluntariness omitted—Defect cured by evidence of Magistrate.

Where a Magistrate inadvertently omits to certify the voluntariness of a confession recorded by him under S. 164, Cr. P. C., the defect may be cured by the evidence of the Magistrate. Ram Sanchi v. Emperor.

Confession recorded under S. 164 fulfilling all ingredients of certificate except failure to append certificate in terms of S. 164 (8) is curable under S. 533. Maroti v. Emperor.

—S. 533—Scope—Failure of Magistrate to ask whether confession made voluntarily—Illegality.

The omission to question an accused person before recording his confession as to whether he is making it voluntarily is a material omission which prejudices him and the defect is a fatal one not curable by S. 533. Such a confession is not, therefore, admissible in evidence. Farid v. Emperor.

—S. 537—Failure of justice.

There is no distinction between illegality and irregularity. The sole criterion given by S. 537 is whether the accused person has been prejudiced or not. The object of procedure is to enable the Court to do justice but if in spite of even a total disregard of the rules of procedure justice has been done, there would exist no necessity for setting aside the final order which is just and correct simply because the procedure adopted was wrong. Where the misjoinder of persons is contrary to S. 239 (e), it is an illegality and not a mere irregularity, but even so it is yet curable by S. 537, if it has not in fact occasioned injustice. Emperor v. Mathuri.

When hearing a reference under S. 307, the whole case is open to the High Court, and in dealing with the reference it exercises all the powers which it exercises on appeal. Under S. 537, therefore, it is not competent to the High Court, when dealing with such a reference, to take any action in consequence of a want of any sanction required by S. 195, which would take the form of an order quashing the whole of the proceedings and directing a re-trial, unless such want has occasioned a failure of justice. *Emperor v. —S. 537—Failure of justice.

When the decision of a Criminal Court in substance appears to be correct, an Appeal Court should endeavour to uphold the decision even in cases where the rules of procedure by which the trial is to be regulated had been transgressed except where the breach of the prescribed rules is of so grave a nature that the form of trial was substantially different from that provided by law for the offence charged, or where, although the violation of the rules was not so profound as radically to alter the mode of trial, it is proved that thereby in the event a failure of justice has in fact been occasioned. The test to be applied in cases where the prescribed rules of procedure have not been followed, to ascertain whether there has been a mis-trial is always essentially the same, namely, whether there has been a miscarriage of justice. Rules and Regulations are intended to be the handmaid and not the mistress of the law, and in criminal proceedings, it is of the utmost importance that a decision just and reasonable on the merits should not be disturbed because in the course of the proceedings some flaw can be detected that is not fundamental, and which is not proved to have worked injustice to the accused, although it may constitute a breach of the rules of criminal procedure. Whether a particular breach of the procedure prescribed in the Code vitiates the proceedings or not,

-----S. 537—Mode of trial—Cross-cases—Mixing of evidence.

A Court has no right to consider at all the evidence given in one case for the purpose of reaching his conclusions in another. If the two cases deal with separate issues, even although they arise out of the same set of circumstances, and to some extent, raise the same controversy, and if also the parties claim that the evidence in the first case is irrelevant to the issues in the second case, the matter is clear. But if the reception of the evidence required to enable the point to be decided in the second case is merely a formal repetition of evidence, which has already been given and heard and possibly also decided by the same Tribunal and it is directed to the same issue or issues of fact, its vain repetition may be reasonably waived. If the parties for their own convenience and other obvious motives, consent to treat the evidence in the former case as though it had been repeated in the latter case, such evidence is by implication and for all practical purposes brought on to the record of the second case, although not actually recorded. *Sukhai Amir v. —S. 537—Scope.

The provisions of S. 537 are mandatory and no Court is entitled to set aside a finding, sentence or order of a subordinate Court in direct contradiction of the terms of the section. The words "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained" must refer to the other sections in that Chapter unless there is any specific provision in any other section of the Code which says that any particular error will vitiate proceedings in spite of the fact that no failure of justice has been occasioned by such error. Quaere:—It is doubtful whether a distinction can be made between irregularities which may be cured under the provisions of S. 537 and illegalities which may not be so cured. The procedure in India is governed by statute and it is doubtful whether it is admissible for a Court to go outside the statute and proceed in a manner contrary to its provisions merely on general principles. Bhajja v. Emperor.

—S. 537—Scope of—Restriction on reversal or alteration of finding—Competent jurisdiction, meaning of.

The term "competent jurisdiction" in S. 537, Cr. P. C. refers to the character and the status of the Court which has decided the case. The restriction imposed by S. 537, Cr. P. C., not to reverse or alter a finding or order or sentence on the ground of any absence of sanction unless it has occasioned a failure of justice, clearly indicates that a Court may be of competent jurisdiction to try a case in the absence of sanction; and, therefore, a sanction is not a condition of the competency of the Tribunal, but only a condition precedent for the institution of proceedings before a Tribunal. S. 537 only cures the want of sanction in those cases which are covered by S. 195, Cr. P. C., the absence of sanction required by any other provision of the law cannot be remedied. *Emperor v. "The same offence" means an offence arising out of the same act or series of acts and can mean nothing else. Under S. 539, a Court inspecting a spot is bound to record a memorandum of inspection noting briefly the facts observed at the inspection, and if the Court has omitted to record such a memorandum, the portions of the judgment which are based on the impression received at the spot on such inspection should not be taken into consideration by the Appellate Court in deciding the guilt of the appellant. *Musa v. A Magistrate can make a local inspection for the purpose of enabling him to understand the evidence laid before him and to use the evidence of his own eyes to test the truth of the witnesses, and it is immaterial that the result of such inspection is not at once put on record and laid open to the scrutiny of parties; nor is it necessary that the accused or their representatives should invariably be present at a local inspection. Where, after a local inspection, the Magistrate recalls the prosecution witnesses under S. 540, Cr. P. A Magistrate has no power while making a local inquiry to question the crowd and get answers without examining them regularly as witnesses and recording their evidence after allowing the parties an opportunity to cross-examine them. A Magistrate made inspection of a site without giving notice to the parties. The accused was, however, present by chance. The Magistrate made a compensation order in favour of the accused and it appears that the Magistrate has been largely influenced in his judgment not only by personal inspection of the site but by local inquiries made by him. It is quite competent to a Court, when ordering compensation to be paid out of the fine imposed, to provide by its order for the proportionate distribution of the amount realised. In the absence of any such direction, an order providing for payment of compensation out of the fine imposed ought not to be construed as meaning that nothing was payable until the full amount of fine was realised, but as meaning that compensation will have priority over the claims of revenue. In re: Khaddam Venkata Rao. 16 Cr. S. 545—Granting compensation—Appeal—Notice to complainant—Necessity of.

Although an Appellate Court cannot be said to be netting without jurisdiction in not sending notice to the complainant, yet nevertheless an Appellate Court should, in the exercise of a proper discretion, give notice of the hearing of the appeal from a conviction to the complainant when an order of compensation has been made in his favour under S. 545. Motilal v. Bakwant Ganesh Marathe. 38 Cr. L. J. 76 : 165 I. C. 641 : 19 N. L. J. 140 : I. L. R. 1936 Nag 147 : 9 R. N. 93 (2) : A. I. R. 1936 Nag. 144.

S. 545—Granting compensation—Cancellation of an appeal.

Where upon conviction of the accused an order under S. 545 (1) (b) is passed against him directing payment of compensation and the conviction is set aside on appeal, the necessary consequence of the setting aside of the conviction is the setting aside of the sentence of which the necessary consequence is the extinguishment of the order made under S. 545 (1) (b). There is no provision of law which requires notice of an appeal by the accused to be issued to the complainant in the trial Court. The most that can be said is that inasmuch as the appeal might end in an order of acquittal which would involve the extinguishment of an order under S. 545, Cr. P. C., in favour of the complainant in the original trial, it is desirable that a notice of the appeal should be given to him. But this view of the matter will not justify the statement that, owing to the omission to issue such a notice in such a case, the Court has acted illegally or without jurisdiction. Hlanda Meah v. Anamale Chettyar. 37 Cr. L. J. 832 : 163 I. C. 242 (2) : 9 R. Rang 6 : A. I. R. 1936 Rang. 247.

The main purpose of S. 552 is to protect women and girls from detention for immoral purposes, although no doubt the section would be appropriate to cases where the purpose of the detention was clearly unlawful although not necessarily immoral. The powers given to District Magistrate by S. 552, are exceptional powers to be used with caution and only when the conditions of the section are satisfied. Taking the word 'unlawful' in its ordinary meaning of 'contrary to or prohibited by law' in particular cases, there cannot be much difficulty in determining whether the purpose is or is not unlawful. The Magistrate cannot assume jurisdiction, which in the absence of allegations of unlawful purpose he does not possess, to give a relief which it is the function of another Court to grant. *Om Radhe v. S. 540, Cr. P. C., simply provides that a Magistrate may summon any witness whose evidence appears to be necessary, but the power to summon a witness does not by any means imply a power to discover such witness by personal inquiry out of Court. One of the basic principles of the Indian judicial system is that a cause shall be determined on evidence given on oath in Court and in the presence of the parties. Where a Magistrate makes a personal inquiry in a case out of Court without notice to the parties, and as a result, summons certain witnesses, his action is improper and not in accordance with law, and disqualifies him from conducting the trial. Fakir Muhammad v. Emperor.

The first part of S. 540 is an enabling provision whereby a Court, in the exercise of its discretion, is empowered, at any time before it actually pronounces judgment, to take further evidence, either for the prosecution or for the defence, and for the purpose it may adjourn the hearing of a case in order to procure the attendance of the proper persons. In many instances it happens that new light is thrown on the case by a witness for the defence and it then becomes desirable, sometimes in the interest of the accused himself, that fresh evidence should be called for. Where this fresh evidence is likely to prove prejudicial to the accused, the Court should proceed with the utmost circumspection. It should not exercise its power under the section merely because the prosecution desires it to do so. The second part of the section, on the other hand, is imperative. If the new evidence appears to the Court essential to the just decision of the case, and this must depend entirely on the particular circumstances of each case, the Court has no choice but is bound to take the evidence. Maung Po Hmyin v. Emperor.

Under S. 556, pecuniary interest even to a small extent is a sufficient disqualification independently of the question whether the Magistrate is really biased or likely to be biased. A Magistrate who is a share-holder in a Company is, therefore, disqualified from trying a case against the auditors of the Company under S. 282 of the Companies Act. *Parashuram Dalaram Shamdasani v. —S. 556—Interpretation.

The words "try any case" in S. 556 are comprehensive enough to include the hearing of an appeal. Where upon the allegation of an Official Receiver, a District Judge presents a complaint against an insolvent under S. 69 (5), Provincial Insolvency Act, he is a party to the case, although he has little or nothing to do with the prosecution. Consequently, in the event of the insolvent being convicted, the District Judge would be disqualified under S. 556, Cr. P. C., from hearing an appeal against the conviction as Sessions Judge. The consent of a party concerned cannot affect the absolute disqualification imposed by S. 556. Mamoon v. Emperor.

—S. 556—Party to case.

A Magistrate is not disqualified by S. 556, from trying a case based on a private complaint and which has not been filed under his direction or sanction merely and solely on the ground that the validity of certain orders passed by him in his capacity as an Executive or Revenue Officer is directly put in issue in the case and that the innocence or the guilt of the accused depends to a considerable extent on the effect of such orders. A direct personal pecuniary interest, however small, in the result of a case disqualifies a Judge, Magistrate or Justice from trying a case. Where, however, the interest is not pecuniary, the disqualifying interest should have substantially the same effect so as to create a reasonable suspicion of bias ; but a mere possibility of a bias is not enough. Where the only interest in the result of a case tried by a Magistrate is that he is concerned in it in his public-capacity, it may fairly be presumed that his interest is not so substantial as to warrant the inference that he is likely to have a real bias in the matter. It would be otherwise, if in addition to his being so interested, there are other circumstances to suggest the real likelihood of a bias. Mohandas Joyramdas v. Emperor.

-----S. 561-A—Abuse of Process of Court.

The inherent jurisdiction of the High Court to pass any orders necessary to prevent abuse of the process of any Court is not questioned and indeed has been clearly expressed in S. 561-A. Not every immoral act is criminal and it is an abuse of the process of a Court to attempt to create new crimes in order to compel men to conform to a high standard of probity in business dealings or to force them to execute their promises. *Chidambaram Chettiar v. -----S. 561-A—Abuse of Process of Court—High Court's inherent power to prevent abuse of process of Court—Remarks by Appellate Court about Magistrate, expunging of.

High Court has inherent powers to make such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice. The power to expunge a portion of a judgment delivered by a competent Court is intended for cases of exceptional circumstances and should be sparingly exercised. There is neither any precedent nor is this desirable, that the High Court should, on the motion of a subordinate Magistrate, expunge remarks made by a lower Appellate Court relating to the conduct of judicial proceedings taken by the said Magistrate. Mohammad Qasam v. Anwar Khan.

-----S. 561-A—Discretion—Inherent power of Court—Expunging passage from judgment of lower Court—Jurisdiction of High Court, when exercised—Acquittal—Revision.

Although a High Court has undoubted jurisdiction to set aside an order of acquittal, this power will be exercised only in rare and exceptional cases. A High Court has inherent power to order the deletion of passages in the judgments of subordinate Courts which are neither irrelevant nor inadmissible and which affect the character of witnesses or accused persons. This jurisdiction, however, can be exercised only when there is no foundation whatever for the remarks objected to and not where it is a matter of inference from evidence. Panchanan Banerjee v. Upendra Nath Bhattacharji.

-----S. 561-A—Discretion.

There is no rule providing for the employment of Counsel at the expense of Government in an enquiry before a Magistrate, but on principle, there is no objection to such employment if the Crown is prepared to pay for the services of a legal practitioner. There can be no doubt, however, that when the Sessions Judge or the Magistrate engages a Counsel for the defence of an accused, he does so with the express or implied consent of the latter and that no Court has any authority to force upon a prisoner the services of a Counsel, if he is unwilling to accept them. The Court has no inherent power in the interests of justice in appointing a Pleader for an accused person without his consent and to treat such Pleader as his representative within the meaning of Ss. 353 and 540-A, Cr. P. C. The inherent jurisdiction of the Court which receives recognition in S. 561-A, cannot be invoked for the purpose of doing an act which would conflict with any of the provisions of the law or the general principles of criminal jurisprudence. The rule of law is firmly established that, when a Statute confers upon the Court a specific power, the Court cannot, by relying upon its inherent jurisdiction, extend the scope of that power. *Emperor v. Where a given case falls within the provisions of the said section is a question of fact to be determined by the circumstances of each particular case, and, therefore, it is not safe to draw any analogy from the decisions in other cases. In cases where a Deputy Commissioner, or other executive head of a District or department, orders a prosecution, because the matter before him demands elucidation by judicial inquiry, S. 556 would not be applicable. But in cases where the officer ordering a prosecution has satisfied his own mind that the accused is guilty, the section would be applicable and such officer should not try the accused. *Faiz Muhammad v. The Magistrate then applied for leave to prosecute the accused and at the same time proceeded with the trial, which had been stayed, and convicted the accused: Held, the Magistrate after he had sent in his application for leave to prosecute the accused should have taken the further orders of the District Magistrate, as to whether he was to go on with the case, but that accused was not entitled to a fresh trial as he had

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 561

———S. 561-A—Scope and object.

The special jurisdiction recognized by S. 561-A can be invoked only in exceptional cases for which no express provision has been made by the Code and to redress only such grievance as calls for an immediate relief which can be granted only by the High Court. The inherent jurisdiction should be exercised with due care and caution and must conform to sound general principles and precedents. It was never contemplated by the Legislature that the High Court should exercise its inherent power for making pronouncements upon questions of law in order to guide a Magistrate in conducting a preliminary enquiry. S. 561-A does not confer any new powers on the High Court but merely recognises and preserves the inherent powers previously possessed by it. The section, as its language shows, embraces three classes of orders, namely, orders which may be necessary (1) to give effect to any order passed under the Code; (2) to prevent abuse of the process of any Court; and (3) to secure the ends of justice. No legislative enactment dealing with procedure can provide for all the cases that may possibly arise, and it is an established principle that Courts must possess inherent powers apart from the express provisions of the law, "which are necessary to their existence and the proper discharge of the duties imposed upon them by law." This doctrine finds expression in S. 561-A. Emperor v. Sukh Dev.

The alleged falsification of accounts, the embezzlements, the cheating and the forgeries were all alleged to have been perpetrated by the accused in the District Superintendent of Police's Office or in connection with the books and papers maintained, or issued from there, and no question whatever with reference to the efficiency of the work of the Treasury Officer or to the discharge of the work of his office was substantially involved in any of the cases. ment delivered by a competent Court, is intended for cases of exceptional circumstances and it should be borne in mind that in weighing evidence and arriving at conclusion on questions of fact, lower Courts have to review the conduct of witnesses with reference to particular incidents and at times have to adjudge generally on the veracity or otherwise of such persons, and in doing so, they have often to make remarks which reflect adversely on their character. It is of the utmost importance to the administration of justice that Courts should be allowed to perform their function freely, fearlessly and without undue inference by the High Court. At the same time it is equally necessary that the right of the Magistrate to make disparaging remarks on persons who appear or are named in the course of a trial is one that should be exercised with great reserve and moderation especially where the person disparaged has had little or no opportunity of explaining or defending himself. If the conduct of a witness appears to the Judge to be suspicious or otherwise not above-board, he has the right and the duty to test his evidence by putting questions to him. But before he is justified in commenting adversely upon a witness's evidence, he must establish the particular fact warranting such criticism by proper evidence in Court and not on conjectures or by reference to materials which are not properly on the record. *Kanwar Sen v. There is no inherent power in the High Court to alter or review its own judgment in a criminal case once it has been pronounced and signed, except in cases where it was passed without jurisdiction or in default of appearance without an adjudication on the merits, and S. 561-A has made no change in the law. All that S. 561-A does, is to declare that such inherent powers as the High Court may possess have not been taken away or abridged by any of the provisions of the Cr. P. C. It does not confer any new powers but merely declares that such inherent powers as the Court may possess shall not be deemed to be limited or affected by anything contained in the Code. The concluding words of S. 561-A "or otherwise to secure the ends of justice," can only mean that such other inherent power as the Court possesses is likewise preserved. The High Court is not given nor did it ever possess any unrestricted and undefined power to make any order which it might please to consider was in the interest of the justice. Rajn v. Emperor.

-----S. 562—Offence beyond scope.

The fact that an accused was prosecuted under S. 19 (e), Arms Act, for possession of an unlicensed dagger is a lanbardar of 30 years age, is no reason for showing leniency by not sentencing him but only taking security under S. 562, Cr. P. C. His age should carry no weight. At that age a man has arrived at a time of life when he is fully responsible for his actions and capable of realising their nature to the full. If the fact that it is his first offence by itself be sufficient reason for waiving the punishment, it should be applied in all cases under S. 19 (e), Arms Act, in which there are no aggravating circumstances. But it is impossible to consider that such a course should be adopted universally. The law should be allowed to take its own course, and if it is not allowed to do so, the result would be that an exception is made in favour of an offender merely because he is a man above the average position which in itself would amount to a gross failure of justice. S. 562 should only be applied in special cases and for special reasons. Akhtar Munir v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 610 : 168 I. C. 783 : 9 R. Pesh. 131 : A. I. R. 1937 Pesh. 51.

-----S. 562—Scope.

S. 562 is intended to apply to those offenders (especially youthful ones) who, without being persons of depraved character, may, on occasion, succumb to sudden temptation. The accused were convicted under S. 61, Excise Act, for the offence of manufacturing liquor contrary to law and being in possession of it and were sentenced to four months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 each. On appeal, the Sessions Judge reduced the sentences on the ground that this was appellants' first offence, that the principle of S. 562, Cr. P. C., applied and that appellants were father and son. The Government applied for enhancement of the sentences: Held, that as the offence of manufacturing illicit liquor implied a good deal of preparation and as it was mostly done with the intention of selling to others, it could not be said to be done in consequence of succumbing to sudden temptation; that when a man was found for the first time by the Police manufacturing illicit liquor, he had probably done it at least a dozen times before; and that as it deprived the Government of revenue, besides demoralising the people, deterrent sentences were necessary in such cases. *Emperor v. S. 562 (1-A), Cr. P. C. is confined in its operation to offences under the Penal Code and cannot be applied to offences punishable under the City of Bombay Municipal Act, and a Magistrate has, therefore, no jurisdiction to warn and discharge a person who has been found guilty of an offence under S. 471 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. *Merwanji M. -----S. 562 (1-A)—Interpretation.

The proviso to Sub-s. (1) of S. 562 of the Cr. P. C. must be read as a part of the sub-section. It is superseded as regards the effect of Sub-s. (1-A) by the words "the Court before whom he is so convicted," in the aforesaid sub-section and cannot be used so as to control these words. A Magistrate of the Second Class, therefore, has jurisdiction to pass an order of release of an accused person convicted by him under S. 279, Penal Code, after due admonition, under S. 562 (1-A) of the Cr. P. C. The High Court will not, in revision, interfere with an order passed by a Magistrate under S. 562 (1-A) of the Cr. P. C. unless the order is clearly mistaken or injudicious or amounts to a failure of justice. Murlidhar v. Mahboob Khan.

Inasmuch as S. 562 confers a new power, it must be strictly construed. In order to enable a Court to exercise the power conferred by S. 562, it is not necessary that the offender should be young, that the offence should be trivial, and that there should be extenuating circumstances. The mention of these conditions and of the character and antecedents of the offender merely indicates generally considerations with regard to which the discretion of the Court should be exercised in dealing with first offenders who are convicted of any of the offences specified in the section. *Emperor v. Similarly, the "cheating" in the same section covers the offence of cheating in all its forms and is intended to include offences punishable under Ss. 418, 419 and 420 as well as under S. 417, Penal Code. Har Narayan v. Ramji Das.

Before applying S. 562, the Court must consider whether there is a good case for its application or not, and must guard against two things, viz :—one, danger to the public and the other, danger to the accused himself, which may result from the applicability of the section. Where a complaint is made to a Magistrate under S. 452, Penal Code, and where there is nothing in the complainant's examination on oath to justify the Magistrate in thinking that the offence falls under S. 451, he ought not to follow the procedure of summary trials laid down in Chap. There are two fundamental conditions precedent for the trial of a case outside a Presidency town under the provisions of Chap. ————— Chap. XXXIII—Proceedings under—Charge, if can be cancelled—Accused not discharged—Whether should be committed to Sessions—Accused, whether can waive privilege of Chap. XXXIII.

Once a Magistrate has taken proceedings under Chap. XXXIII, Cr. P. C., his powers are curtailed. He cannot, for instance, under S. 213 (2), cancel the charge, and if he does not discharge the accused under S. 209 or S. 253, he must, as S. 446 directs, commit the accused for trial. Chap. XXXIII is a special procedure of which certain individuals at their own request are permitted to avail themselves. Therefore the accused can waive a right which he need never have claimed provided his request can be granted without prejudice to the trial of his co-accused or the business of the Courts. *E. L. Where a youthful offender of 17 to 19 years of age commits offences under Ss. 380 and 457, Penal Code, and does not give sureties and possesses no property of his own, he should not be sent to prison. The Magistrate should know the evil effects a short term of imprisonment, or indeed, imprisonment at all, may have upon a young offender. It places the stigma of prison upon him; it may remove the fear of prison from his mind and by bringing him into contact with old offenders, may turn him towards a life of crime. The proper course in such a case, for the Magistrate, when it is clear that the accused can give no sureties is to admonish him for the offence under S. 380, Penal Code, under S. 562 (1-A), and to sentence him to imprisonment till the rising of the Court for the offence under S. 457, Penal Code. *Emperor v. CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS ———Discretion of Magistrate, stay pending civil suit—High Court, power of interference of.

The postponement of criminal proceedings until the disposal of a civil suit, brought in respect of the property which is the subject-matter of the criminal case, is entirely within the discretion of the Magistrate, and where in the right exercise of that discretion a Magistrate refuses to stay a criminal case, the High Court will not interfere. Raghubar Singh v. Emperor. 21 Cr. L. J. 342 : 55 I. C. 678 : 1 P. L. T. 489 : A. I. R. 1920 Pat. 143.

———Institution of.

Though no invariable rule can be laid down, it is ordinarily undesirable to institute criminal proceedings until the determination of civil proceedings in which the same issues are involved. Criminal proceedings lend themselves to the unscrupulous application of improper pressure with a view to influencing the course of the civil proceedings, and beyond that there is the mischief of criminal proceedings being instituted with an imperfect appreciation of the facts where they have not been ascertained in the more searching investigation of a Civil Court. Lucas v. Official Assignee of Bengal. 21 Cr. L. J. 481 : 56 I. C. 577 : 24 C. W. N. 418 : A. I. R. 1920 Cal. 624.

———Order by Criminal Court.

An order passed by a Criminal Court unless set aside in due course of law, remains in force, and its validity cannot be questioned in a subsequent prosecution based on the disobedience of that order. On Pe v. Emperor. 25 Cr. L. J. 1303 : 82 I. C. 471 : 3 Bur. L. J. 27 : A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 295.

———Principles applicable—Civil suit, pendency of.

There is no statutory provision as to the stay of criminal proceedings. The question is one of expediency and has to be decided on the merits of the particular case keeping in view the desirability of avoiding the possibility of conflicting decisions and also the necessity of protecting the accused in the civil proceedings in the sense that he should not be prejudiced. Where the questions to be settled in the civil and criminal proceedings although arising out of the same transaction and intimately connected with each other, are different in the two cases and can be decided independently of each other, it is not necessary to stay the criminal proceedings till the decision of the civil proceedings. Tajdin v. Taj Muhammad. 23 Cr. L. J. 700 (b) : 69 I. C. 380.

———Proceedings amended without notice, effect of—Amendment—Notice—Criminal Procedure Code, S. 147.

It is the elementary right of a party when an amendment is made in criminal proceedings to have notice thereof. A criminal Court is not justified to infer from certain other matters that the party really knew what was going on and was not prejudiced. Therefore, where proceedings under S. 147, Cr. P. C., which originally related only to a portion of a pathway were amended without giving notice to the other party and made applicable to the whole pathway, the final order in the proceedings is not binding on the party affected by it. Janki Nath Kundu Pal v. Manmohan De. 25 Cr. L. J. 674 : 81 I. C. 162 : A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 263.

———Proceedings under S. 174 complete—Procedure.

Where proceedings under S. 174, Cr. P. C., have also been taken, they must be kept distinct from those taken on complaint. Gulab Khan v. Ghulam Mohammad Khan. 20 Cr. L. J. 26 : 99 I. C. 58 : 8 L. L. J. 524 : 27 P. L. R. 779 : A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 30.

———Stay—Civil suit—Subject-matter of both identical.

Where the subject-matter in both a criminal proceeding and a civil suit is identical, and the main questions for decision are the same, the criminal proceedings should be stayed pending the decision of the civil suit, if the same was brought without undue delay. In framing a charge for cheating, the manner in which the alleged cheating was committed should be set out. Janki Das v. Emperor. 23 Cr. L. J. 595 : 68 I. C. 819 : 38 P. L. R. 1922 : 4 L. L. J. 409 : A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 424.

———Stay of, pending civil suit—Discretion of Magistrate—High Court, interference by.

The question whether criminal proceedings should be stayed pending the disposal of a civil suit is primarily a matter for the discretion of the Magistrate before whom they are pending, and the High Court will not lightly interfere with the exercise of this discretion. Where the matter is purely a civil matter and can more fully and adequately be dealt with

All that a First Class Magistrate has jurisdiction to do in case of a charge of an offence triable by the Court of Session is to follow the procedure laid down by Chap. XVIII, Cr. P. C. In that chapter neither S. 250 nor S. 253 finds any place. Therefore, the Magistrate has no power to award compensation to the accused when discharging them under S. 209. Under S. 209, Cr. P. C., a Magistrate is not authorised to write a judgment in a case triable by a Court of Session; all that he is empowered to do is to record reasons for a discharge, if he makes such an order, and to pass the order of discharge. *Hait Ram v. Where, after hearing the evidence in warrant case in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the Cr. P. C., for the trial of such cases, the Magistrate is of opinion that a prima facie case is made out of an offence triable by a Court of Session, and the proceedings are converted accordingly, the accused has a right to have the witnesses recalled for cross-examination, more especially where the accused reserved his right of cross-examination till after the framing of the charge in the trial as a warrant-case. *Damarcha v. When an offence complained of is triable exclusively as a warrant case, and the trial has actually begun, and the statements of the complainant and some of the witnesses recorded, it is illegal to split the offence into two component parts, and to proceed to try it as a summons-case. A Magistrate when trying a warrant-case is not justified in recording the statement of the accused immediately after the examination of the complainant and before he is cross-examined and the evidence for the prosecution recorded; such a procedure is not only prejudicial to the accused in his defence, it contravenes the provisions of Chap. XXI and entirely vitiates the trial. Ganga Saran v. Emperor.

All criminal prosecutions are at the instance of the Crown, and the Crown is really the prosecutor in a criminal case and all costs ought to be paid by the Crown for summoning witnesses for the prosecution. It is open to a Magistrate to consider whether or not the deposition of a witness is material for the prosecution in a case, and if he is of opinion that the witness sought to be summoned is not a material witness and the application for summoning the witness is frivolous and vexatious, he might refuse to summon him. The whole object and policy of r. 196, Criminal Rules of Practice, is that a Magistrate should satisfy himself that there is no compulsion by the Police or ill-treatment so as to raise suspicion that the statement of the accused is not a voluntary statement, and so long as the spirit of the rule is satisfied, it is undesirable that questions should be put in the specimen forms as suggested in the Criminal Rules of Practice showing a total want of trust in the Police. *Maniara Kuppathan v. —————Appeal against conviction—Duty of Appellate Court—Duty of accused.

In all cases in which the Court sits in criminal appeal, it has to consider the case against the appellant bearing in mind exactly the same principles as must be borne in mind by the Court of trial in the first instance. The appellant does not come here as one who has been convicted and has to satisfy the Court beyond all reasonable doubt that he has been wrongly convicted. If after a conviction before a Subordinate Court, the Court of Appeal comes to the conclusion that there may have been a miscarriage of justice, the Appellate Court cannot allow the conviction to stand. The task of the appellant is, therefore, to bring before the consideration of the Appellate Court such matters as may cast a reasonable doubt of his guilt, having regard to all the circumstances of the case. It is true that a Sessions Judge hears and sees the witnesses, and in many cases, his opinion as to their demeanour or truthfulness may be of the highest value and an Appellate Court should not lightly disregard the conclusion at which for properly expressed reasons he arrived. On the other hand that does not absolve the Appellate Court from an independent duty of scrutinizing the evidence with care and of being satisfied not that a reasonable person might have come to the conclusion which the learned Sessions Judge came to, but that no reasonable person could not have come to any other conclusion but that the accused was guilty of the offence charged against him. Nga Kyaw Hla v. The King. 39 Cr. L. J. 248 :

173 I. C. 94 : 10 R. Rang. 306 :
A. I. R. 1938 Rang. 45.

—————Appeal from acquittal—Presumptions in favour of accused.

In an appeal by Government against an acquittal, the accused starts with a double presumption in his favour. Firstly, there is the rule that it is for the prosecution to make out their case and that until they do so beyond all reasonable doubt, the accused must be presumed to be innocent, and secondly, that the accused having succeeded in securing an acquittal from a Court, a Superior Court will not interfere until the Crown shows conclusively that the inference of guilt is irresistible. Emperor v. Ghulam Nabi.

29 Cr. L. J. 301 :
107 I. C. 835 : 7 Pat. 768 :
A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 146.

—————Appeal from acquittal—Principles.

The accused in an appeal from an acquittal retains his right of being presumed to be innocent until the charge is fully brought home to him. He has the right which he had in the trial Court of being given the benefit of a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. He must also have the benefit of the opinion of the trial Court upon the credibility of the witnesses whom that Court has the advantage of seeing face to face and judging of their demeanour and he has the right to ask that the acquittal should not be set aside unless the trial Court has taken a perverse view of the evidence and has arrived at unnatural and distorted conclusion. Emperor v. Chaturbhai Narain Choudhury.

A. I. R. 1936 Pat. 350.

—————Approver—Corroboration, nature of—Statement of accused before Magistrate.

Statement made by the accused himself before a Magistrate is the most powerful form of corroboration of an approver, that one could have provided that the statement definitely commits the accused to have been present at the murder of the deceased. The corroborative evidence tending to connect the accused with the crime described by an approver does not need to be evidence connecting the accused in every detail with the particular crime. Evidence is only required which tends to connect the accused with the crime. Kushalia v. Emperor.

175 I. C. 548 : 40 P. L. R. 61 : 10 R. L. 743 :
A. I. R. 1938 Lah. 339.

—————Approver—Corroboration needed.

In considering the evidence of the approver, it must be borne in mind that corroborative evidence need not be direct; it may be circumstantial, and what is wanted is evidence sufficient to confirm the evidence of the approver.

In the course of recording his reasons for reference under S. 307, Cr. P. C., it occurred to the Sessions Judge that on account of wrong joinder of charges the whole trial was illegal and he, therefore, acquitted the accused : Held, on appeal that as the whole trial was illegal, the Judge could neither convict nor acquit, and that the High Court was bound to set aside orders of acquittal. *Emperor v. —————Acquittal—Setting aside.

The charge framed against the accused was one under S. 427, Penal Code. The Magistrate held a local inquiry without a notice to the parties during the course of the trial, and as a result, came to the conclusion that the offence made out was one under S. 426, Penal Code. After having come to that conclusion he acquitted the accused under S. 247, Cr. P. C., because the complainant did not happen to be present on the date on which he was to pronounce judgment : Held, that there were serious illegalities, as a result of which, the order of acquittal was vitiated and it must, therefore, be set aside. *Bankim Behari Sen v. —————Bail—Applicant young and coming from respectable family—Consideration of.

Although in an application for bail, the argument, that the applicant is of young age and comes from a respectable family, and that it will be unfortunate that he should be associated with bad characters in jail if ultimately it is found that he was not guilty, has some force, yet after all it is an argument, which could be raised in almost every case, because respectable men even older may suffer deterioration from detention in jail. *Dhanpal v. It is one of the elementary principles of administration of justice that a judicial officer, who is called upon to decide a matter in controversy, must exercise his own that conspiracy, and in the alternative, upon the same facts, when one of the accused is charged as the principal offender with criminal breach of trust and the others as abettors, the accused should be convicted under one or other of the alternative charges: they should not be convicted under both. *Emperor v. If the Magistrate is not able to find for certain that facts exist which justify conviction, he should, of course, acquit the accused, but where the Magistrate has found that facts do exist which establish that the accused person must have committed some offence although it is doubtful exactly what that offence was, a conviction for the least serious offence is perfectly good. *Babu Ram v. Though in original trials of criminal cases the requirements of Cr. P. —————Appeal against acquittal—Duty of Government—Government should be bound in arguments to grounds raised in memorandum.

It is not proper in an appeal against an acquittal for Government to attempt to snatch a conviction by making out another

The liberty of a person once acquitted is again to be put in jeopardy, and the cases, in which an appeal against an acquittal is to be made, should be carefully considered in all their aspects before the appeal is filed, and the Government should be bound in arguments and should consider themselves bound in arguments to the grounds raised in the memorandum of appeal. *Emperor v. —————Appeal against acquittal—Powers of High Court—Distinction between appeal from conviction and appeal from acquittal.

In dealing with an appeal from an order of acquittal on a matter of fact, the High Court has full power to review at large the evidence upon which the order of acquittal was founded and to reach the conclusion that upon the evidence, the order of acquittal should be reversed. In exercising this power, the High Court will always give proper weight and consideration to such matters as the views of the trial Court as to the credibility of the witnesses, the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused, his right to the benefit of any doubt, and the slowness of an Appellate Court in disturbing a finding of fact by a Judge who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses. Though there is no distinction made in Cr. P. C. between an appeal from an acquittal and appeal from conviction, yet there is a real distinction, apart from the provisions of the Cr. P. C. If the appellant can show that the essential evidence against him is not sufficiently reliable, as the lower Court thought or that all reasonable doubt as to his guilt is not removed thereby, he is bound to succeed on these principles. An Appellant from a judgment of acquittal has, on the contrary, to work in the face of these principles and to satisfy the Court that accused can drive no benefit from them on the facts of the case under appeal. His task is thus naturally more difficult than that of the convict-appellant. Emperor v. Ghulamali Bahawal.

—————Benefit of doubt—Judge should not find accused guilty even in alternative of offence in respect of which doubt exists—Duty of Judge—Charge under S. 302, Penal Code—"Knowledge" established—Conviction should be under S. 304, Part 2.

It is the duty of a Judge to make up his mind upon the facts of the case before him, and if there is any real doubt as to the facts, then he must give the accused the benefit of that doubt, not by finding him guilty, even in the alternative, of the offence in respect of which the reasonable doubt exists, but by acquitting him of that offence. In other words, he should remember that the burden lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt of the accused, and if the prosecution fail to prove the intention which is necessary in order that an accused should be convicted of murder, then they fail to prove the accused is guilty of murder, and the accused should not be convicted of murder even in the alternative. If the prosecution can prove the knowledge which is necessary for the conviction of an offence under S. 304, Para. 2, Penal Code, the proper course is to convict the accused of an offence under S. 304, Part 2 and not in the alternative. *Ghulam Hyder Imam Baksh v. —————Appeal—Procedure—Weight of evidence—Credibility of witnesses—Interference by Appellate Court.

Questions of fact may be decided by a trial Court by drawing inferences from proved or admitted facts or on the credibility of witnesses alone. In the former case, an Appellate Court is in as good a position as the Trial Court to arrive at a finding. In the latter case, where the trial Court's finding is based on the demeanour of the witnesses in the witness-box and the impression which that demeanour created on the mind of the Judge who had seen and heard them, the finding should carry considerable weight and should not lightly be disregarded by an Appellate Court. Where, however, the finding of the trial Court is not based on the demeanour of the witnesses and the impressions derived therefrom, a Court of Appeal is free to come to its own conclusions as to the credibility of a particular witness. Where in a criminal trial the question is one of the credibility of the evidence, and the witnesses, who have told a consistent and probable story, have been believed by the Sessions Judge and the assessors, who had the advantage of hearing their evidence, it is not right for an Appellate Court to set aside the decision of the Court of Trial on conjectural grounds of what might have happened in the face of the sworn testimony of what actually did happen. In a criminal trial, the Court should always insist upon having before it the evidence relating to the circumstances under which the accused persons were arrested. Silla Bakhsh Singh v. Emperor.

Before an accused person is called upon to make any answer to the case for the Crown, there must be some credible account of the circumstances before the Court. The Cr. P. C. does not provide for the right of an accused person to be heard in arguments at the conclusion of the case, but it is the invariable practice of all Magistrates' Courts to hear the accused at the end of the case and this practice ought to be followed. Malik v. Emperor.

Where the Court finds on the prosecution evidence itself that the accused is entitled to the benefit of one of the exceptions to S. 300, it should give the accused that benefit though he may not have relied on the exception. Consequently, where in a prosecution for defamation, the occasion of defamatory statements is found to be a privileged one, there should be no conviction even if this exception is not expressly relied on by the accused. *Bhaddu v. —————Burden of proof—Failure of accused to explain suspicious circumstances—Prosecution, if can infer guilt.

Though in a criminal case the burden of proof to prove the guilt is always on the prosecution and never shifts to the accused, it is open to the prosecution to rely on an inference from the failure of the accused to give an explanation of acts, suspicious in themselves, with which he is connected. *Bapurao v. —————Burden of proof—Inference of guilt, when justifiable.

The burden of proving the guilt of the accused lies entirely on the prosecution, and the law does not cast on the accused any burden of proving his innocence. The proof of the case against the accused does not depend for its support upon the absence or want of any explanation on the part of the accused but upon the positive affirmative evidence of his guilt as given by the Crown. In order to justify the inference of guilt, the inculpatory facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt; the proof of guilt thus dispelling all reasonable doubts. *Shevanti v. the statutory definition of culpable homicide and murder, and it is not only in cases of murder that this burden of proof is thrown on the prosecution by statute, that burden is imposed in every offence coming within the ambit of the Penal Code. The maxim actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea, a source of fruitful discussion in Criminal Courts in England, has no application in India, as the statutory definitions of the offences in the Code in each case expressly contain a proposition as to the state of mind of the accused. *Daljit Singh v. —————Burden of proof—Onus to prove guilt—General rule that it always lies on prosecution is subject to exception in S. 105, Evidence Act.

The general rule that the onus always lies on the prosecution to prove the guilt is subject to statutory exception contained in S. 105, Evidence Act. The prosecution cannot claim a verdict of guilty because the accused puts forward a false defence. The guilt must be determined on the strength of the prosecution evidence alone, but where the accused puts forward a plea that he did commit the offence charged but in circumstances that excused or mitigated, the prosecution in such cases can show that no such circumstances exist and so the claim is averted. Bhag Singh Pakhar Singh v. Emperor. 41 Cr. L. J. 447 : 187 I. C. 15 : 12 R. L. 463 : A. I. R. 1940 Lah. 54.

—————Burden of proof—Prosecution, duty of.

In a criminal trial the burden of proof is always on the prosecution, and it is only when a good prima facie case has been made out against the accused sufficient to justify his conviction of that offence, that the burden shifts upon the accused to prove that he is not guilty of any such offence. *Nannhun v. If the Court either is satisfied from the examination of the accused and the evidence adduced by him, or from circumstances appearing from the prosecution evidence that the existence of circumstances bringing the case within the exception or exceptions pleaded has been proved or upon a review of all the evidence is left in reasonable doubt whether such circumstances do exist or not, the accused, in the case of a general exception, is entitled to be acquitted, or in the case of a special exception, can be convicted only of the minor offence. *Emperor v. He ought not, as if it were, to mortgage his mind to another officer and to seek instructions from the latter, whenever he is called upon to decide a difficult or important matter. Although there is no hard and fast rule, it is desirable that the ordinary practice should certainly be that the lower Court should first be moved and this is particularly desirable in a bail application, where the appropriate Court to deal with the matter is the Court which is going to try the case and where an expression of opinion by a superior Court is likely to prejudice the trial in the lower Court. But where the lower Court's judgment is likely to be affected by some remarks made by the superior Court during the proceedings in that case, then the superior Court can be moved but only as an exception to the general rule. *Mohi-ud-Din Lal Badshah v. The granting of bail is a judicial and not a ministerial one and no judicial function which can only be performed by Courts having seisin of the proceedings, can be delegated to another in the absence of an express provision of law, or of some rule having the force of law. It follows that the Magistrate cannot delegate this responsibility of granting bail to another Magistrate unless the law expressly empowers him to do so. Emperor v. Banarsidas.

———Bail—Points to be considered—Status of accused, if should be taken into account—Bail, if can be granted as of right.

The main points for consideration in the application for bail are :—(1) Whether there is any likelihood of the accused absconding ; and (2) whether there is any likelihood of the accused tampering with the evidence by threatening the complainant. The Courts must see that the Crown does not get a free hand and the accused are not locked up or are hampered in their defence simply on the ground that it is alleged or feared that they will tamper with the evidence. The person accused under S. 302-115, Penal Code, are not entitled to bail as a matter of right. King-Emperor v. Abhairaj Kunwar.

The Police Regulations are a volume of orders by the Local Government and there is no paragraph in the Cr. P. C., giving the Local Government power to issue orders for carrying out the provisions of the Cr. P. C. The Code gives him authority to order release on bail and it is certainly not for a Sub-Inspector to refuse to carry out such an order on the mere technical quibble that he thought that such an order should be communicated to him through the Superintendent of Police. There is nothing in S. 167, Cr. P. C., which indicates that the order either of detention or of release should be communicated through the Superintendent of Police. Under S. 496, Cr. P. C., where a person is accused of non-bailable offence, the Court may grant bail and there is nothing in that section which provides that the order for release shall be communicated through the Superintendent of Police. *Muhammad Yakub v. —————Commencement—Offence punishable with death or transportation for life—Trial, when commences.

Where an accused person is charged with an offence punishable with death or transportation for life, his trial really commences when the case is proceeded with in the Sessions Court. The inquiry before the Committing Magistrate is of a preliminary nature and therefore there could be no objection to the case being referred to a Council of Elders without moving the Court to stay its hand. Minho v. Emperor.

CRIMINAL TRIAL

It is always better that the complainant attends in person rather than that he should be examined on commission, but where he has already appeared twice for cross-examination and his condition is clearly bad and it has been certified by doctors that he must have undisturbed rest, and if complete rest and treatment are taken, there is every possibility of his recovery within the next three or four months, commission should be issued for his cross-examination especially when it appears that the opposition to this commission is caused not by a legitimate objection to its being issued, but by a desire to delay the case. *H. Where the accused while stealing water-melons worth about six annas, inflicted an injury, the mere fact that the injury might have been fatal when in fact it is not so, is not enough by itself to commit the accused to Sessions. A case should be considered from the point of view, not of what injury might have been inflicted but what injury was in fact inflicted. Emperor v. Waroo.

He was not competent (under S. 215) to quash the commitment though he could (under S. 240) stay the trial of some charges or allow them to be withdrawn on conviction being had on the murder charge, in that case the consequences set forth in S. 240 would follow in the event of the conviction being set aside. If his intention was to withdraw the charges, it would be "premature" to do so. Emperor v. Sadasibo Majhi.

 borated statement of, whether sufficient.*

An accused person should not be convicted upon the uncorroborated statement of the complainant that he saw the accused committing the offence with which he is charged. In a criminal trial, the case of the prosecution cannot gain any strength on account of the weakness or improbability of the defence theory, and in order to obtain a conviction, there must be a definite, positive and certain finding that the case for the prosecution, as alleged, is proved and that the offence has been brought home to the accused. In a criminal case the accused cannot be convicted upon the prosecution case being more probable than that of the defence. *Ram Sunder Sahay v. Em-which must establish beyond reasonable doubt that no other alternative, than the truth of the prosecution case will explain the facts.

 that area. It was established in evidence that prior to the date of the occurrence, the petiof a portion of the attached area extending to 345 bighas. The Courts below assumed that unless the accused proved that they cut from within the area of the 345 bighas, they must be held to have committed theft and convicted the accused. The boys were released after admonition under S. 562-A of the Cr. P. C. :

 much as the burden of proving that the area from which the jhalasi was cut was not within the area of 345 bighas in the possession of the petitioners was on the prosecution and the

A person bringing a complaint in a Criminal Court is entitled to produce evidence in support of it subject only to two conditions, viz., (a) that the facts alleged constitute an offence and (b) that there are no circumstances apparent on the examination of the complainant, such as to justify the Court in coming to the conclusion that the complaint is false. *Muhammad Salamat-ul-Lah v. Though it cannot be said that a complainant has no rights whatever in a criminal matter, yet it is a common mistake to suppose that criminal cases based upon complaints are in the nature of private suits between private parties. Too much cannot be made of the alleged rights of a complainant. If a complainant is really anxious to get compensation for some private wrong, his proper procedure is to file a suit in the Civil Court for damages. It can hardly be said that a private complainant is wronged if an accused person is discharged or acquitted. Kamni Begam v. Bashir ul-Zaman Khan.

However strong the moral certainty as to the guilt of a person may be, he ought not to be convicted without sufficient evidence connecting him with the offence. Therefore, a conviction cannot be based on circumstantial evidence unless and until all the inferences to be drawn from the whole history of the case point so strongly to the commission of the crime by the accused that the defence theory appears in the face of it impossible or highly improbable. *Bahali v. ———Confession—Admissibility against co-accused.

A confession of a co-accused is admissible against another accused only if it equally implicates the confessor with his colleague in crime. Where the confessing accused implicates himself as having concealed a dead body but implicates his co-accused not only for concealment but also for the murder, the confession will not be admissible against the co-accused as far as the murder is concerned. *Mangal Singh v. ———Confession—Confession by accused after being kept in Police custody for number of days.

If an accused has been sent up to headquarters for production before a Magistrate within 24 hours of his arrest, and if then he has made a confession, it may be argued on behalf of the prosecution that there was nothing suspicious about the circumstances in which the confession was made. But when it is found that the man who makes a confession has been kept in Police custody in defiance of the rules on the point for a number of days, then the Court is entitled to ask the prosecution to explain why the irregularities were committed. When a confession itself contains a statement that the accused made it under the threat of the Police, it must go against the prosecution. It is not right for the Court to put reliance on a portion of the statement made by the accused person which would implicate him in the commission of a crime and to disregard another portion simply because it would go against the prosecution story. Abdul Subhan v. Emperor.

41 Cr. L. J. 258 : 186 I. C. 192 : 1939 A. L. J. 966 : 12 R. A. 384 : 1939 A. W. R. 768 : A. I. R. 1940 All. 46.

———Confession—Conviction based on retracted confession, legality of.

To base a conviction upon the sole evidence of a subsequently retracted confession, which has been corroborated by certain discoveries, both the confession and the discoveries must be beyond suspicion. A confession should be, unless there are exceptional reasons to the contrary, recorded in open Court and during Court hours and the confessing accused should not be returned to the Police custody. Where the confession is taken in a Dak Bungalow before a Second Class Magistrate, without disclosing any reason for so doing and the accused was subsequently sent back to Police custody, it cannot be said that the confession and recoveries are free from doubt and the conviction based on such evidence cannot stand. Jahana v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 338 :

166 I. C. 1003 : 38 P. L. R. 791 : 9 R. L. 458 : A. I. R. 1937 Lah. 98.

———Confession—Corroboration.

As a rule of practice though not of law, a

-----Commitment—Sessions Judge thinking there was no sufficient evidence to convict accused—Commitment, if should be quashed.

High Court would not quash commitment merely on the ground that upon the record there was no evidence on which the accused could reasonably have been convicted because this is a matter which should better be left to the Magistrate who is trying the case. The Magistrate who having the powers to punish adequately for an offence which is within his jurisdiction fails to do so, fails to comply with the provisions of S. 254, Cr. P. C., and that the committal may, on that ground, be held bad as being an error of law. Emperor v. Waroo.

-----Committing Magistrate, duty of.

It is the function of the Magistrate conducting the enquiry to weigh the evidence produced before him and not merely to insulate that which was directed against the petitioners and act upon it without any analysis of the remaining evidence. A Magistrate conducting an enquiry into a case triable by a Court of Session should weigh the evidence produced before him before deciding whether to commit or discharge the accused. Fazal Razak v. Emperor.

-----Committal proceedings—Procedure—Duty of Committing Magistrate in recording evidence.

It is true that a Committing Magistrate is not holding a trial but only an inquiry leading up to a trial; but the fact remains that he is recording evidence just as much as a Sessions Judge himself, and it is his duty to record the evidence fully in order that the accused may have ample notice of the matter with which he is charged and of the evidence by which the prosecutor seeks to prove the case. In fact, if the prosecutor at the trial intends to lead any further evidence of substance beyond what has been adduced in the Committing Magistrate's Court, the correct procedure is that he gives the accused notice of this new matter in his opening address at the trial. Yusuf Mia v. Emperor.

Confession—Recording of—Duty of Magistrate while recording confession.

When an accused person makes a statement to the Police, one would expect the Police, as a general rule, to suggest to the accused person that he should make that statement before a Magistrate and it is only after he expresses his willingness to make a statement before the Magistrate that a request is made by the Police to the Magistrate to record the confession. It is then the duty of the Magistrate to remove the accused person from all Police influence, to warn him that his statement will be used against him, to give him time to think over the consequences of such a confession and to satisfy himself that the statement made was a voluntary one. *Kamsala Muneyya v. CRIMINAL TRIAL

Confession—Retracted—Allegation of extortion—Duty of Magistrate.

Where an accused retracts the confession and alleges that it was not voluntary but was extorted from him by gross torture by the Police resulting in serious injuries, it is the duty of the Magistrate, to take immediate steps to have the accused examined by a competent doctor. This is a matter to which the attention of the Local Government might well be drawn, as there is a tendency upon the part of Magistrate and Judges to regard themselves as mere recording machines and not to take obvious steps for the elucidation of matters before them. Gurdit Singh v. Emperor.

Confession—Retracted confession.

Obviously a retracted confession has little evidentiary value against a co-accused when compared with the evidence of an accomplice given on oath, which can be tested by cross-examination; but when, there is considerable circumstantial evidence connecting the accused with the murder, the Court is entitled to use the confession of a co-accused to remove any doubts that might still linger in its mind whether in spite of the fact that the accused has been identified, that he was seen both before and after the offence under suspicious circumstances, yet by some chance he may not have taken part in the murder. *Kamsala Munneyya v. Omission to comply with the requisites of the Criminal Rules of Practice would not vitiate a confession provided S. 161, Cr. P. C., is complied with. Confession—What is—Statement containing self-exculpatory matter, when amounts to confession.

No statement that contains self-exculpatory matter can amount to a confession, if the exculpatory statement is of some fact which, if true, would negative the offence alleged to be confessed. An admission of a gravely incriminating fact, even of a conclusively in-

The definition of confession is not contained in the Evidence Act and in that Act it would not be consistent with the natural use of language to construe confession as a statement by an accused "suggesting the inference that he committed" the crime. *Pakala Narayana Swami v. Confession—Whether to be accepted or rejected as a whole—Confession stating accused gave blow only in self-defence—Further statement that deceased died from accidental hatchet blow from another—Medical evidence to the contrary—Exculpatory statement concerning plea of self-defence, if can be considered on merits.

Held, that where the accused confessed that he dealt a blow only in self-defence and also stated that deceased died as a result of an accidental hatchet blow from a prosecution witness and the statement as to cause of death was found false in view of the medical evidence, the exculpatory statement giving rise to the plea of self-defence being distinct and separate from statement as to cause of death, could be considered on merits. *Ahman Shah Muhammad v. Confession—Accused caught red-handed, making confession before Court.

An accused who was caught red-handed while committing dacoity made a confessional statement in the Court of the trial Magistrate which, however, was subsequently retracted. On the day of the confession the accused had admittedly come from Police custody, he was before the Court for a considerable period and overwhelming evidence for the prosecution was recorded against him before his statement was taken: Held, that in the circumstances it could not be said that there was any cogent inference that his confession was in any way improperly induced. It was more likely to have been due to the fact that he had the intelligence to see that he had been caught red-handed and that the evidence which had been given against him —Confession—Proper recording of voluntary true confession—Form of questions.

The proper recording of confessions which can be shown, on the face of them, to be voluntary and apparently true, is of the highest and supreme importance in criminal trials, especially in those of murder and dacoity. The circumstances of each case vary, and the form of the questions put by the Magistrate so as to satisfy himself that the prisoner is in fact making a voluntary confession may also in consequence vary, but fundamental principles must ever remain constant, and their application needs only the exercise of a little intelligence and a little sympathy and understanding on the part of the Magistrate, of the needs and the limitations of the confessing prisoner. Prag v. Emperor.

Confessions contradictory—No direct testimony —Conviction.

In the absence of any direct evidence it is not safe to rely upon the retracted confessions which are contradictory to each other in material details and which have been contradicted by direct testimony. The facts that the confessions were retracted and that when they were made, some Policemen were interested in the investigation of the case, are good grounds for not relying upon the confession. *Remal Singh v. Confession made under torture of Police—Duty of Court.

The excuse of torture by the Police in compelling an accused to make confession is used so often without any justification time and again, that it has become very difficult for any Court to pay serious attention to it, and indeed no Court should pay any attention to it unless it is supported by evidence. An accused cannot therefore get rid of statement, made by him by merely retracting it. Purnananda Das Gupta v. Emperor. (F. B.).

One accomplice cannot corroborate another. The case of each of the accused must be taken on its merits and independent corroborative testimony must be sought for in every instance. It is not enough to find such corroboration as regards the presence and participation in the crime by several of the accused and then to conclude that the evidence of the accomplices must be true so far as it implicates the rest. The danger in these cases is that while an accomplice may be telling a story, which is in the main true, they may wickedly implicate persons who took no part in the joint crime, although the story as to the commission of a joint crime by a number of criminals acting in concert may be well-established. The rule of prudence demands that the evidence of accomplices should be corroborated in material particulars implicating each of the accused: Held, that when there are a number of accomplices giving evidence against seven accused persons, it was a mistake, having found corroborative evidence implicating four of them for the Judge to assume that the story of the accomplices did not require corroboration as regards the identity of the other three. *Nga Po Aung v. ———Conviction—Duty of prosecution—Weakness of defence.

It may be that the accused were not well defended at the trial, and did not put forward a defence which was obviously open to them but they cannot be convicted upon a criminal charge merely on that account, since the prosecution must clearly establish its case irrespective of the defence taken. *Tarachand Sah v. ———Counter-cases—Cross-cases—Circular No. 52 issued by Judicial Commissioner's Court, N. W. F. Province—Intention of.

It is intended by Circular No. 52 issued by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, N. W. F. Province that in cross-cases arising out of same transaction, the trial Judge should bring on each record separately the whole story complete by itself and should give findings on the issue involved in that case independently from those which arise in the other. *Ibrahim v. ———Cross-cases—Evidence recorded separately—Judgment, common—Irregularity.

In the trial of cross-cases arising out of the same occurrence, the Court ought to keep the evidence in each case entirely distinct and to deliver separate judgment in each case. Where, however, the evidence is separately recorded in each trial, the mere fact that both the cases are decided by one judgment would not vitiate the trial. Madat Khan v. Emperor.

Trials in criminal cases are governed by the provisions of the Cr. P. ———Cross-cases—Separate trials—Appeals by accused—Joint hearing, legality of—Procedure.

In two separate counter-cases the accused were convicted by the trial Court. An appeal was preferred from each case by the convicted persons. The Sessions Judge tried the two appeals together as one case and made up his mind that there were two contradictory stories. Having found which of the stories was true, he allowed one of the appeals and dismissed the other: Held, that the Appellate Court ought to have kept each appeal absolutely separate and to have dealt with it on its merits confining itself to the evidence given in that case and that alone, and that the procedure adopted by the Appellate Court was illegal. *Doat Ali v. ———Cross-cases—Two separate trials but one judgment—Procedure, legality of.

There were two separate trials before the Magistrate and there were two appeals before the Sessions Judge. Although the judgment was one continuous document, the decisions in the two cases were quite separate and distinct from each other. None of the findings in the one case was based upon the evidence recorded in the other case only. The judgment before the High Court was a self-contained document and was based upon its own oral and documentary evidence: Held, that the procedure was not illegal and the accused was not prejudiced. *Panna Lal v. -----Delay in disposal—Effect.

Delay in the disposal of cases is seriously prejudicial to the course of justice in cases where identification is a material issue and should, therefore, be avoided. Dhanu Raut v. Emperor.

-----De novo trial, meaning of.

What is called a trial de novo, is not strictly speaking a new or fresh trial. All that it means is that the accused has the right to have all or any of the witnesses re-summoned or re-heard by the new Magistrate. In re : D. M. Venkatanarayana Ayyar.

-----Deposition — Procedure — Verification that deposition has been read over to witness must be signed by presiding officer of Court.

The essential feature in verifying that a deposition has been read over and interpreted to a witness is the certificate signed by the presiding officer of the Court. This is a statutory provision. Any initialling by the Reader prior to the signature by the Judge is unessential and is merely done for the Reader's own convenience or for the more certain satisfaction of the Judge ; but, when the Judge has certified that the evidence has been read over to the witness, it must be presumed until the contrary is shown that this has not been done. *Vithoo v. -----Court's duty—Duty of Magistrate—Conviction set aside by High Court—Committal to Sessions directed—Procedure in Committing Magistrate's Court.

Where an accused person is tried and convicted by a Magistrate, but the conviction and sentence are set aside by the High Court and the latter directs that the accused be committed to Sessions, all that the Magistrate should do is to re-open the original proceedings, frame a fresh charge, explain it to the accused, require him to give in his list of witnesses for Sessions, examine, if he thinks fit, any of those witnesses, who have not already been examined and then to write a short formal order of committal as under the orders of the High Court. Nga Myaing v. Emperor. 26 Cr. L. J. 1106 : 88 I. C. 274 : 2 Rang. 447 : A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 82.

-----Court's duty—Procedure—Duty of trying Judge to decide all questions of law at trial.

It is the duty of the Judge to decide all questions of law arising in the course of the trial. If his decision is erroneous, it is liable to correction by a superior Tribunal in appeal or revision ; but as long as the case is before the Judge, he is responsible for the decision and cannot relieve himself of that responsibility by seeking advice or instructions from a superior Court. It would be most improper for a superior Court to give such instructions, if sought. Emperor v. Dosu. 18 Cr. L. J. 913 : 42 I. C. 145 : 11 S. L. R. 52 : A. I. R. 1917 Sind 24.

-----Court's duty—Practice—Duty of Magistrate—Private conference with Prosecuting Officer—Invoking intervention of superior Executive Officers—Putting accused to inconvenience—Improper conduct.

It is an elementary principle of justice that a person cannot simultaneously perform the functions of a Prosecutor and those of a Judge in a Criminal case. A Magistrate ceases to be an Executive Officer when he is sitting in a Court to try a criminal case. A District Magistrate, as such, is directly subordinate to the High Court and he cannot be allowed to invoke the intervention of his superior Executive Officers in a matter concerning the discharge of his judicial duties for which he owes responsibility only to the High Court. *Taj Mahmud v. ———Duty of Magistrate—Judgment—Proper way of dealing with criminal case, stated.

The proper way for a Magistrate to deal with a criminal case is to discuss first the prosecution evidence and come to an independent finding on the truth or falsity of the story related by them and then to examine the statement of the accused and criticize it in the light of the circumstances brought on the record. Where the Sessions Judge dealt with the statement of the accused first and having found it untrustworthy, except to the extent of his admission that he had killed his wife, then animadverted upon the prosecution evidence and finding it to be entirely unreliable, believed the evidence only to the extent to which it agreed with the admission of the accused : Held, that —Cross-examination—Discretion of Court.

A trial Judge can restrict the scope of the cross-examination of witnesses. Eknath Sahay v. Emperor. 17 Cr. L. J. 353 (a) : 35 I. C. 657 : 1 P. L. J. 317 : A. I. R. 1916 Pat. 236.

—Cross-examination—Duty of Court.

While it is the duty of every Court to keep the cross-examination of a witness within legitimate bounds, it must be careful in the discharge of that duty, not to exercise too effective a control so as to unduly curtail legitimate cross-examination. Too much interruption by the presiding Judge in the course of the cross-examination of witnesses by the Counsel for the accused has, more often than not, the result of robbing the cross-examination of its efficacy and, therefore, undue interference in cross-examination must be avoided by the presiding Judge. Salag Ram v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 416 (b) : 167 I. C. 515 : 1936 A. W. R. 967 : 9 R. A. 550 : A. I. R. 1937 All. 171.

—Cross-examination—Evidence—Practice—Right of Judge to curtail cross-examination.

A Judge is, and always must be, in control of the proceedings in his Court. On the one hand the right of the cross-examination must be carefully guarded, and it must be remembered that it may be necessary for an Advocate to approach delicately and with caution the point upon which he is seeking to obtain admissions. It may be important that a witness whom he does not consider truthful should not be put on his guard by immediate presentation of the case set up by the opposing side. The length of the cross-examination is by no means the criterion of its excellence, and it is lamentably true that lack of skill in advocacy often leads to a failure to appreciate this fact. When irrelevant topics are pursued at great length, and persistence is shown in going over the same ground again and again in the hope of making the witness appear discrepant, some limit must be placed upon the latitude given. Brahmayya v. The King. 40 Cr. L. J. 265 : 179 I. C. 783 : 11 R. Rang. 347 : A. I. R. 1938 Rang. 442.

—Cross-examination.

—Cross-examination—Fresh matter introduced in re-examination—Opportunity for re-examination.

Where in re-examination of a witness a fresh matter is introduced and the Court grants only three minutes for further cross-examination, the time is insufficient as the object of re-examination is to clear the ambiguities in cross-examination, and if new and important matter is allowed to be introduced in re-examination, the accused has a right to cross-examine the witness as regards the matter so introduced. Salag Ram v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 416 (b) : 167 I. C. 515 : 9 R. A. 550 : 1936 A. W. R. 967 : A. I. R. 1937 All. 171.

—Cross-examination, right of, defined.

Right to cross-examine prosecution witness includes right to cross-examine as to any previous statement relevant to the matter in question. Muhammad Rahim v. Emperor. 36 Cr. L. J. 581 : 154 I. C. 762 : 29 S. L. R. 92 : 7 R. S. 167 : A. I. R. 1935 Sind 13.

—Cross-examination after charge—Witness not appearing—Effect.

A witness did not appear for cross-examination after charge and the accused also did not press for a warrant of arrest against him : Held, that the accused could not be said to have been prejudiced by the failure of the Court to allow the cross-examination of the witness. Ashfaq v. Emperor. 37 Cr. L. J. 1108 : 165 I. C. 25 : 1936 A. L. J. 958 : 9 R. A. 247 (1) : 1936 A. W. R. 731 : A. I. R. 1936 All. 707.

—Crown appeal—Appeal by Crown—Limitation—Two charges against accused—Conviction on one—Appeal.

An accused was charged for two offences but was acquitted on first of them and convicted for the second. He preferred an appeal against conviction in which he was acquitted of the charge for which he was convicted but the Court expressed opinion that he ought to have been convicted on the charge on which he was first acquitted. Thereupon the Crown preferred an appeal against his acquittal on the first charge. It was preferred after three months and eight days after the original order of acquittal. There were executive instructions that appeals by the Crown should be filed not later than three months after the date of the order of acquittal : Held, that although the appeal ought to have been filed within three months, yet the period exceeded being small one, under the circumstances of the case, the delay was not unreasonable. The King v. Nga Tok Hla. 39 Cr. L. J. 490 : 174 I. C. 839 : 10 R. Rang. 437 : A. I. R. 1938 Rang. 109.

—Death of complainant—Abatement of proceedings.

On the death of a complainant during the pendency of a trial, the proceedings abate if the offence complained of was personal to the complainant, that is, if it was one which could be compounded without the sanction of the Court. In other cases, the proceedings do not abate. Labhu v. Emperor. 20 Cr. L. J. 717 : 52 I. C. 797 : 25 P. R. 1919 Cr. : A. I. R. 1919 Lah. 409.

—Defence—Accused and his counsel taking different defences.

The accused himself may, on his own behalf, take up one line of defence, but it is equally open to his Pleader on his behalf to take or to embroider the case. Hans Raj v. Emperor.

—Duty of Prosecution.

The prosecution is bound to place before the trial Court all evidence relating to the case which is at its disposal, and then invite a judicial decision. Prosecution takes a very grave risk if it takes upon itself the duty of withholding evidence relating to the crime. The duty of the prosecution is that the trial Judge must be informed about the opposite version and then it will be for the Judge to decide whether he should hear the evidence or not. Where subsequent to the case being sent up for trial but before the trial takes place, the higher officers suspect the conduct of the investigating officer in connection with the case and come to know of some further evidence which may possibly throw doubt on the prosecution story which had been put forward as a result of the inquiry made by the investigating officer, the proper and the fair course is to place fresh evidence or information before the Court which has to adjudicate the question of guilt or innocence of the accused persons. In a case of this kind, it is the clear duty of the prosecution to produce at the trial not only the witnesses who supported the version of the investigating officer but also the witnesses on whose evidence the prosecution authorities passed an order for the suspension of the investigating officer. Abdul Subhan v. Emperor.

Though it is the duty of the prosecution to place before the Court, especially in a case of murder, all the available evidence which is likely to throw any light upon the crime and the withholding of such evidence is likely to be treated by the Court as a flaw in the evidence for the Crown, each case depends upon its own facts and circumstances. *Lachmi Narain v. —Duty of prosecution—Accused refusing to explain evidence against him—Presumption.

A person accused of a crime is under no obligation to offer any explanation of his conduct or of any circumstances which direct suspicion towards him. It is the duty of the prosecution to prove its case, but when such proof has been given and the time comes when the prosecution evidence, whether direct or circumstantial, has to be weighed, it is impossible for a Court to ignore the fact that it is unweakened or un rebutted by contrary evidence, which might have been produced if the facts alleged were not true. The accused is at liberty to defend himself in any way he thinks proper, but the Court cannot ignore the consideration that the prosecution evidence has been left un rebutted. *Sushil Chandra v. ———Duty of prosecution to examine all witnesses, limits of—Failure to examine.

The prosecution is under no obligation to examine witnesses who, it has reason to believe, will not speak the truth. It is usual in such circumstances for the prosecution to tender such witnesses for cross-examination. But if the defence omit to claim this privilege, they cannot be permitted to make capital of the fact that these witnesses were not cross-examined. Although in strictness it is not necessary for the prosecution to call every witness who has been examined before the Committing Magistrate; it is usual to do so, so that the defence may cross-examine them, and if the prosecution in their discretion do not choose to call such a witness, then the presumption may be drawn that his evidence, if given, would be unfavourable to their case. *Narayan Mandal v. The confessing accused must invariably be sent to the judicial lock-up as soon as possible after confession, and on no account, be returned to Police custody. There certainly ought to be an interval between the taking of the confession and the handing over of the accused to the Police for any subsequent purpose. Where the accused is handed back to the Police, the Court must look very carefully at the confessions and the surrounding circumstances in order to satisfy itself that the confessions were in fact voluntary. *Surat Singh Buta Singh v. disinterested auditor of the contest between the prosecution and the defence, and it is his duty to elucidate a point which the prosecution or the defence may have left in obscurity either intentionally or unintentionally. He must come to clear understanding, so far as is possible, of the actual events that occurred and he cannot shield himself behind the plea that any point was left obscure by either party when he had an opportunity of illuminating that obscurity. *Mehr Singh v. -----Duty of Judge.

In a serious case the Judge should allow every opportunity to the accused to adduce such evidence as they chose, either oral or documentary. If at the time of examination he is of opinion that the evidence adduced by the accused is inadmissible or irrelevant, or that such evidence was adduced for the purpose of vexation or delay or to defeat the ends of justice, he can refuse to receive such evidence. But he should not dismiss an application for adjournment for producing witnesses merely on the ground that those witnesses would not prove relevant matters or any matters admissible in evidence under the law, without allowing the accused to produce their witnesses and then deciding about the relevancy of their evidence. *Mukhtal Hossein v. The proof of conspiracy in law is very largely inferential, but the inferences which are to be drawn by the Jury and which the Jury should be directed to consider with regard to their conspiracy verdict, must be, even if they are mere inferences, supported by solid evidence. Evidence of motive is not tantamount to evidence of conspiracy. Therefore, in a conspiracy case, if there is no evidence of conspiracy, but merely that of motive, the Judge should direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. Ekkabbar Mondal v. Emperor.

A Magistrate is not entitled to make observations in his judgment in a criminal case concerning a person who is not a party to the proceedings and who has had no opportunity of being heard, based upon material which is not admissible in evidence in that proceeding, and which even if admissible, would not justify the observations. Such conduct on the part of a Magistrate amounts to an abuse of judicial privilege. Bcnarsi Das v. Emperor.

CRIMINAL TRIAL

—————Duty of prosecution—Capital case—Duty of prosecution to produce all material evidence.

In a capital case, it is undoubtedly the duty of the prosecution to place before the trial Court, the testimony of all available witnesses. Unless it is shown by facts and circumstances in the case that the witnesses were withheld because they would not tell the truth, the prosecution should not be left the option to choose. Mathura Tewary v. Emperor.

—————Duty of prosecution—Defence merely relying on defects in prosecution evidence, propriety of.

Although the prosecution must prove their case in the first instance before the accused can be called upon to make their defence, yet when evidence has once been given on oath by witnesses who profess to have seen the occurrence and who directly implicate the accused and ascribe particular acts to them, it will not avail the accused merely to rely upon discrepancies here and there or upon the absence of adequate motive or on indications that there may be exaggerations in the prosecution story. Ghanshyam Singh v. Emperor.

29 Cr. L. J. 239 :
107 I. C. 305 : 6 Pat. 627 :
A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 100.

—————Duty of prosecution—Defence story untrue—Effect.

Even if the version put forward by the defence be wholly untrue, yet the prosecution must establish beyond all reasonable doubt that the case put forward by them is true. Rambrichh Singh v. Emperor.

6 B. R. 110 : A. I. R. 1940 Pat. 365.

—————Duty of prosecution—Evidence—Appreciation—Mess of false evidence—Attempt to search for truth, advisability.

The duty of the prosecution is to establish the guilt of the accused by evidence which satisfies the Court and it cannot be said that evidence which is for the most part untrustworthy, can be relied upon or can be said to satisfy the Court as regards the few of the accused when the evidence of the same witness does not satisfy the Court in respect of a large number of accused. *G. —————Duty of prosecution—Prosecution, if bound to call all witnesses—Non-examination of some witnesses—Jurors may draw adverse inference.

The prosecution is not bound to call any particular witness or witnesses when there is reasonable ground for the Public Prosecutor to come to the conclusion and believe that such witness or witnesses, if called, will not speak the truth nor is it incumbent on the prosecution to call any witness when the Public Prosecutor believes that the evidence of such person is wholly unnecessary for the trial. It is open, however, to the jurors to draw inference unfavourable to the prosecution for the non-examination of the witnesses. Brichipada Dafadar v. Emperor.

—————Duty of prosecution—Weakness of defence—Conviction.

It is the duty of the prosecution to establish by its own evidence that the accused is guilty. The weakness of the defence evidence is no ground for finding the accused guilty. Ramudu Aiyar v. Emperor.

24 Cr. L. J. 426 :
72 I. C. 538 : 44 M. L. J. 243 : 17 L. W. 370 :
32 M. L. T. 318 : A. I. R. 1923 Mad. 365.

—————Duty of prosecution—Witnesses in a position to give evidence, withheld by prosecution—Inference.

Where there are witnesses who are in a position to give relevant evidence but the prosecution deliberately withholds their evidence without establishing the slightest reason for the suggestion that they had been won over by the defence, the prosecution must face the inference arising from their conduct in withholding evidence. It is the duty of the prosecution to produce the witnesses, and it is for the Court to disbelieve or believe them. The mere fact that their evidence is expected to be inconsistent with the prosecution story, does not justify refusal to examine them as witnesses. Francis Hector v. Emperor.

To believe the evidence of the defence witnesses does not imply that the prosecution witnesses are deliberately lying, for, they may be speaking in good faith but in error, whereas if the Court accepts the evidence of the prosecution witnesses, it must also hold that the defence witnesses are definitely lying, and for this, there is no justification whatsoever. *Nga Ta Te v. The mere absence of an express finding on a special defence raised by the accused apart from a general finding that the prosecution case is true will not render a judgment illegal where it is clear from the judgment that the Magistrate has duly considered the evidence adduced by the accused to support his special defence. *Lakhan Singh v. What exactly amounts to corroboration of the main evidence in cases of sexual offences is always a difficult question. It need not be the direct oral evidence of another person. ————Evidence—Court disallowing question—Ruling should be recorded.

It is most desirable that when a question is disallowed by a formal ruling and an Advocate desires that a note of the ruling should be recorded in the proceedings, this should be done, as the question whether evidence material to one side was improperly excluded may often engage the attention of an Appellate Court. Unless the Appellate Court knows the exact question which was disallowed, or the application which was refused, it is difficult to judge afterwards as to the propriety with which evidence may have been excluded from the consideration of a Court of first instance. *Brahmaya v. ————Evidence—Court's duty.

When prosecution proves only some facts, Court should see if proved facts amount to secution affecting a case must be dealt with summarily and instantly by the Judge at the trial when they are tendered. It is very dangerous to discuss at elaborate length not merely the nature of proof of documents but also their contents from the point of view of the use which is being made of them by the person who tenders them in evidence, viz., the prosecution, and at the same time to say that they cannot be used as evidence. The benefit of a reasonable doubt ought to be given to the accused even with regard to admission of evidence. No Judge in a doubtful case of admissibility ought to allow the evidence first to be given and then in his judgment give a decision about its admissibility. Laijam Singh v. Emperor.

An entry made at the instance of a Sub-Inspector before the recording of the first information report, in the daily diary of the thana, mentioning the names of some of the accused alleged to have been given to him by one of the persons alleged to have been assaulted and injured, is a part of the proceedings of the Police and is consequently inadmissible in evidence for any purpose in Court. *Ahman v. —————Evidence—Admissibility of.

Every Court has got inherent power to allow relevant evidence to be produced by any party at any stage of the trial. If such evidence is allowed to be produced by the prosecution, all that the accused can urge is that he should be given a full opportunity of rebutting it. There is, therefore, nothing illegal or irregular where the Magistrate allows certain documents to be produced while the prosecution witnesses are being cross-examined by the defence. *Lala v. —————Evidence—Admissibility—Murder case — Person dying denouncing accused as assailant in presence of accused and others—Accused remaining silent.

Per Full Bench.—The fact, that an accused person remains silent when denounced in the presence of witnesses by another person as the latter's assailant, is admissible in evidence. The reason of the confrontation of the accused by the person he is alleged to have attacked is two-fold. First, it is of importance as affording evidence of identification ; if the victim dies, it may be of the highest importance that before his death he identified the accused as his assailant ; if he lives and gives evidence of the identity of the accused at the trial, the fact that he did so at the first possible moment is often valuable as showing the consistency of his story. Secondly, it affords the accused person an opportunity of which, however, he is not bound to avail himself, either of denying that he is the person who attacked the injured party or of setting up some fact which may, at a latter stage, form part of his defence, such as that he was acting in self-defence, or under grave and sudden provocation, or that the injuries received were due to accident. *Emperor v. —————Evidence—Admissibility—Statement by signs.

Evidence as to signs made in answer to questions put to the deceased is admissible but statements of witnesses as to what interpretation they put upon the signs are not admissible. But it is difficult to adhere to a clear line of division between the description of signs and the interpretation of signs, and it may be that in some respects witnesses may trespass beyond the line and so usurp what obviously is the function of the jury but where the matter complained of was elicited by cross-examination on behalf of the accused, no substantial grievance can be made out in this regard still less any real or serious miscarriage of justice. *Alexander Perera Chandarsekera v. It is surely a discrepancy of great gravity when a witness, called to say that a fatal blow was struck and the deceased fell in consequence of it, is obliged to admit that on an earlier occasion he told the Police that the deceased fell when he ran into the yoke-pin of a cart. When a man charged with murder in the course of a melee is found to have number of wounds, the prosecution ought to be able to do more than merely call a witness to say that the deceased swung a da in all directions, and then ask the Court to infer that that explains the accused's wounds. *Nga Kyaw Win v. —Evidence — Appreciation—Jail Official committing offence against convict in jail premises—Evidence of other convicts, if can be relied upon.

Where an offence is committed by jail officials in jail premises against a convict, a criticism that all the eye-witnesses are convicts and that, therefore, their evidence is unreliable, has no force. In the first place, in an offence of this kind committed in a jail it is obvious that the only evidence likely to be produced would be that of convicts. If a rule was laid down that evidence was unreliable because it was that of a convict, jail officials would have complete immunity for the commission of any offence against a convict. In addition, there is no reason to believe that those convicted of crimes of violence should be more untruthful than other persons. The vice of untruthfulness would be more associated with those convicted of deceit, fraud or perjury. A murderer may have some good qualities such as courage and initiative. Chaman Lal v. Emperor.

Their confessions were recorded by a Magistrate of the first class a day after the occurrence and the Chemical Examiner's report supported the girl's story. On appeal, it was contended that the confessions were not admissible in evidence and that the girl having in the first instance complained only of the robbery of her ornaments was not a credible witness : Held, that the contentions were not valid, for the confessions were validly recorded and appeared to be voluntary, and the fact that the girl, in the first instance, complained ———Evidence—Expert evidence—Value of—Conviction.

———Evidence—Expert evidence, value of.

The value of the opinion given by an expert depends to a great extent upon the materials put before him and the nature of the questions that are put to him. The criticism that the expert speaks from an impregnable fortress hardly holds good to-day. Experts are always ready to explain the reason for their opinions; and Judges are entitled to attach little or no importance to their evidence if the explanations given are not satisfying. Many Advocates are now able to cross-examine experts very ably. In re: S. A. Sattar Khan.

For a Magistrate untrained in medicine to attempt largely without trained assistance, to ascertain what certain medicines were prescribed for, and what should be prescribed for a particular disease, by reference to medical books is entirely unsound, and the conclusions thus arrived at are valueless. A witness cannot refuse to attend the Court when summoned, and the rules of the High Court have clearly laid down the fees to which an expert witness is entitled. The Court, therefore, should not hesitate in exercising its powers under the law, however highly placed a witness may be. An accused person should not be burdened with the costs of an expert, if his demand is unreasonable, especially when the Magistrate is empowered to enforce the

It may be said generally that expert evidence produced by an interested party may have a certain amount of unconscious bias in favour of that party. A witness may be discredited because he has been convicted for one of two reasons: (1) because the offence that he has committed shows a certain amount of moral obliquity; (2) because it has resulted in the witness having spent some time in jail in company with men presumably of bad character, which association may very possibly have contaminated him. A conviction for adultery in this country is very much the same as appearing as a respondent or co-respondent in the Divorce Court in England, and that it is not generally regarded there as carrying with it the suggestion that the man is unreliable as a witness with regard to matters entirely unconnected with that particular matrimonial offence. *Gafoor v. Where the charge is specific, that the murder was caused by throttling and it is not proved and there is no evidence to show that the deceased was murdered at all, the presumption of guilt cannot be drawn from the recent possession by the accused of jewellery taken from the murdered person. *Emperor v. —Evidence—Presumption—Presumption of guilt—Discretion of Court.

The presumption arising out of the accused's recent possession of stolen property which had been removed from the person of deceased at or about the time of his murder, is one of fact which are inferences which the Court naturally and logically draws from given facts without the help of legal direction and, therefore, fall more properly within the province of logic and do not constitute a branch of jurisprudence. Such presumptions are always permissive in the sense that the Court has the discretion to draw or not to draw them. Nga Toke Hla v. Emperor. 39 Cr. L. J. 47 : 172 I. C. 66 : 10 R. Rang. 214 : A. I. A comparison of hand-writing is something hazardous and inconclusive, and should be made with care and caution in the light of assistance that may be available in the shape of expert evidence or arguments on behalf of parties concerned. The rejection even in toto of an expert's opinion would not exonerate the Court from the duty of coming to an independent finding on the question of an authorship of hand-writing, the Court has to examine the opinion and come to its own decision. The most important things are to examine the general characteristics, formation of letters, fixed pen habits and mannerisms, and discern the identity of the writer. The identity or resemblance in hand-writing has to be found out on the value of the effect of various considerations arising from individual characteristics and idiosyncracies which have been embodied in technical language of experts. *Jitendra Nath Gupta v. Once the prosecution evidence has been refuted in a large measure and the Magistrate trusts the fate of the case to a consideration of probabilities, he is in danger of arriving at the realm of conjecture. Where a party comes into Court with a story which cannot be believed as to its essential details, it is impossible to rely on a part of the story for the purpose of convicting the accused. When the greater portion of the prosecution evidence is disbelieved, it is not open to a Magistrate to re-construct a story which is wholly inconsistent with the story told by the witnesses. *Joharmal Marwari v. The statements made to the Police can only be put to the witnesses under S. 162, Cr. P. C. To bring the provisions of the proviso to S. 162, Cr. P. C. into operation, three conditions must be fulfilled : first, the statement of the witness in question must have been reduced into writing ; secondly, the witnesses must have been called for the prosecution and thirdly, the written statement must be proved. When those conditions exist, the proviso directs that " the Court shall, on the request of the accused, refer to such writing, and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof," and then it can be used to contradict the witness. In actual practice when the first two conditions are fulfilled, the written record of the witness's statement is generally put to him on an undertaking of the prosecution to call the investigation officer to prove the statement, because it is inconvenient to prove each statement separately. So that the general practice is to call the investigating officer at a later stage of the trial and he proves the written statements which have been put to the witnesses. *Emperor v. It is a recognized rule that it is ordinarily unsafe to convict on the evidence of an accomplice unless it is corroborated by independent evidence as against each of the accused. The evidence of one accomplice cannot be used as independent evidence to corroborate the evidence of another accomplice. But a plurality of accomplices might be useful in this way. They have to be considered independently and the Court might, while not losing sight of S. 114 (b) of the Evidence Act, still be able to rely on the uncorroborated testimony of one or more out of a number either on the same or on different points. In re : Surajpalsingh.

It is a mistake to exclude supervision notes from the Police diaries sent to the Court. The investigation may be in the hands of Sub-Inspector and the supervision is conducted by superior officers. But the Court which may use the diaries to aid it in the inquiry or trial cannot rightly be left in ignorance of the supervision which necessarily determines the course of the investigation at point after point. ————Evidence—Procedure—Duty of Public Prosecutor.

It is desirable that when an investigating Police Officer is being cross-examined as to previous statement made to him by the witnesses for the prosecution, the Court should have the Police diary before it and see whether the negative answer of the officer really gives a picture of what the witness in fact had stated. If not, the fact should be borne in mind and the Court should watch whether the matter is cleared up in re-examination. It is, therefore, the duty of the Public Prosecutor to see that the negative answer from an investigating officer in respect of the statement of a witness does not create a wrong impression of what the witness stated before the Police. He must, in these cases, bring about other statements to explain the matter referred to in cross-examination. Yusuf Mia v. Emperor. 40 Cr. L. J. 147 :

————Evidence—Previous conviction—Procedure—Conviction sought to be proved by finger-prints taken in previous trial—Evidence as to identity of prints.

Where it is proved that the accused before the Court had his finger-prints taken in jail far away from his native place, soon after a person of his name was convicted of an offence, that is certainly very strong evidence indeed that the person bearing his name who was convicted was the very person who shortly afterwards had his thumb impression taken. Where, however, the finger-prints were taken elsewhere and taken sometimes after the conviction, it cannot be said that the identity of the convicted person with the accused before the Court has been established. Where a calendar extract has shown previous convictions, there can be no doubt that the person last convicted was also convicted under the various charges mentioned in the calendar extract. In such cases, a list of previous convictions would be confirmatory of the other evidence establishing the identity of the convicted person in earlier cases with the accused before the Court. The list of previous convictions contained on the finger-print slips is not satisfactory evidence of the previous convictions recited therein ; although it may be true that the list of previous convictions forms part of the document. If the prosecution are able to prove—that a number of persons bearing the names of the accused are found in a calendar extract and that the finger-prints of those accused were taken in the same jail at or about the same time, that is very strong evidence indeed that those persons were jointly convicted. *Arumugam v. —Evidence—Statement—Conviction on statement of co-accused—Such statements, when can be used against accused.

Accused are to be convicted upon evidence produced by the prosecution and not by statements made by co-accused to the Police. A person's position as a witness or accused is, so far as the admissibility of evidence is concerned, determined not by what was done by the Police during the investigation but by his position at the trial. A statement made by the accused can be used against his co-accused, only if it is a confession within the meaning of S. 30, Evidence Act. Shewakram Issardas v. Emperor.

proceedings and the criterion is whether there has been any failure of justice. The examination of the accused contemplated by S. 342, Cr. P. C., is one by the Judge direct, without any intervention of Counsel. The putting of one general question to the accused is not a proper compliance with S. 342. Where a complicated question has been put to each of the accused without reference to the particular position of each as brought out by the evidence against him, in spite of the fact that legal advisers were present, procedure may have prejudiced the accused. *Nana v. —Evidence—Tendering of alleged eye-witnesses for cross-examination by defence, propriety of.

In conducting a case for the prosecution, all the witnesses who are alleged or are known to have knowledge of the facts ought to be brought before the Court and examined. In cases where any witness known to the prosecution is able to swear to facts material to the case, the proper procedure to follow is to get him to give evidence on oath as to the several facts known to him, which are relevant to the case though other witnesses might have spoken to the same facts. The practice of merely tendering important eye-witnesses cited by the prosecution for cross-examination is not a practice which should be encouraged, especially in murder cases, as it would be very unfair to the accused. In re : Veera Karavan.

A case which involves a question of intention, really rests upon the facts which are found. If those facts are such that a person of ordinary prudence and ability would come to the conclusion that they point to a guilty intent on the part of the accused, it is for the accused to rebut that guilty intention; and if he does not rebut it, the guilty intent is as much found against him as his physical acts. *Maun v. Inherent powers of Court—Order of de novo trial, propriety of.

Criminal Courts have an inherent power to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice. Certain persons were charged for conspiracy to commit criminal breach of trust and cheating. At the time of the framing of the charges, the Magistrate found that all the accused could not be tried together and that the case should be split up in two groups to avoid misjoinder of charges. He accordingly formed two groups of the accused and ordered a de novo trial of the second group as all the evidence admissible against the first group was not admissible against the second group and the evidence against the second group would have to be taken de novo : Held, that the Magistrate acted rightly in the exercise of his inherent power in ordering de novo trial. *Akhil Bandhu Ray v. CRIMINAL TRIAL

-----Joinder of charges—Charges under S. 20, Cattle Trespass Act and S. 504, Penal Code, legality.

A joinder of charges for offences under S. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act and S. 504 of the Penal Code is not illegal where acts constituting the offences formed part of the same transaction.

-----Joint trial—Affair must constitute one transaction—Held, joint trial was legal.

The affair took place in one village, one incident succeeding another rapidly. From the plan in the case it appeared that the houses raided by the Exeise party were in the neighbourhood of each other. The rioters were from one house to another and finally a whole mob of them surrounded the Exeise Sub-Inspector and his companions, who had to retreat. The alarm and the shouting quickly spread, and presumably everybody in the village soon knew what was afoot: Held, that in these circumstances, the joint trial was legal.

Against three accused, four charges of attempt to commit rape were framed, for which they were jointly responsible. The other charges were framed as against one of them and another charge was framed as against this accused and another: Held, that in every case it has to be considered how far the evidence proves association and how far the various persons tried are prejudiced by a joint trial. In this case the joint trial was not only permissible but was desirable.

The Magistrate modified this by making an order that Rs. 75, out of the account might be paid to the petitioner for the purposes of his defence or otherwise; but the rest of the money would be detained pending the disposal of the case: Held, that there was no jurisdiction in the Magistrate for making any such order. Ss. 516 and 517, Cr. P. C. were clearly not applicable. The position in law was that the accused had lent this money to his bankers upon the understanding that they would re-pay it to him at any time on demand, and there was no provision of law which could authorise the Court to make an order upon the accused not to ask the Bank to re-pay the money which he had lent to them. The complaint in the case was referred to the Police, and on receipt of the Police report, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, after considering it and various aspects of the case, dismissed it under S. 203, Cr. P. C. The Sessions Judge was moved by the complainant and he directed a further inquiry into the complaint. On receipt of this order the Sub-Divisional Magistrate sent the case to another Magistrate to hold inquiry and ordered for a report by certain date. The Magistrate summoned the accused and proceeded to try the case. He examined some witnesses and discharged the accused under S. 253 (2), Cr. P. C. and recommended to the Sub-Divisional Officer for a proceeding under S. 145 of the Code. When the matter was put up before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, he, holding that the discharge of the accused by the Magistrate was entirely without jurisdiction, ignored it and ordered summons to be issued against the accused who were subsequently convicted: Held, that as the Magistrate was only ordered to hold inquiry and make a report, he had no jurisdiction to try the case and hence the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was perfectly justified in ignoring the trial. As the magistrate ignored the order that he was directed to make a report and overlooked it, he could not be said to have acted with care and caution within the meaning of S. 529, Cr. P. C. and his action could not be allowed to stand. Udit Narayan Patwari v. Emperor.

CRIMINAL TRIAL

———Irregular proceedings—Accused made to point out spot where certain incident occurred.

In a criminal case the accused put forward a defence, the principal incident of which was stated by them to have occurred on a certain spot in the neighbourhood of a village. In order to test the accuracy of the story told by the accused, the Magistrate, on his own motion, took them to the neighbourhood of the village and made them point out the spot in turn. In deciding the case he attached great importance to the fact that they did not all point out the same place. There was no evidence on the record as to what occurred when the Magistrate went to the spot and the Magistrate relied entirely on his own knowledge of the incident: Held, (1) that in the absence of any evidence regarding this episode, it must be totally ignored. Nura v. Emperor.

———Irregular proceedings—Commitment—Dacoity case.

The Magistrate discharged the accused in a dacoity case after holding a preliminary enquiry in the case. The Magistrate gave perfectly adequate reasons in support of his conclusion that no prima facie case had been made out against the accused. In fact, he went to the length of saying that most of the important prosecution witnesses were totally unworthy of credit, and that the prosecution evidence was on the face of it, absolutely incredible. It was impossible to say that the Magistrate acted improperly in assessing the evidence that was put before him. The Sessions Judge's opinion about the evidence was different from that of the Magistrate. He had not specifically found that there was prima facie evidence of the commission of an offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session: Held, that the Sessions Judge in ordering the accused to be committed for trial for dacoity, acted improperly in committing the accused for trial to the Court of Session. *Palaniappa Thevan v. ———Irregular proceedings—Complainant cross-examined by Police after close of case—Prejudice to accused—Conviction will be set aside.

Where after the close of the trial the complainant was summoned to produce certain account books and the summons clearly stated that the witness was to file certain account books, but advantage was taken of this fact, after the whole prosecution case had been closed to cross-examine the complainant on behalf of the Crown in respect of everything connected with this case and to fill up all the gaps in the prosecution evidence: Held, that such unheard of procedure could not be too severely condemned and there was no doubt whatsoever that the accused was greatly prejudiced in his defence on the merits by the trying Magistrate allowing the prosecution —————Jury—Charge—Duty of Judge stated—Misdirection—Law not explained—Held, there was misdirection.

Where the case is one in which there are two diametrically opposite stories supported on oath by two sets of witnesses, one set of whom must be perjuring themselves before the Court, by no means an easy case to try, the presiding Judge ought to exercise the greatest possible vigilance and the greatest possible care in assisting the Jury. But if he feels that there is something extremely suspicious about the prosecution case and he finds that the main witness for the prosecution is a person whose testimony should be regarded with the greatest caution, then he ought to show his hand to the Jury. The Judge should not bother about any report of Police Authorities. His duty is to act as a check and an effective check upon the wrongful conviction of persons who may be innocent or may be in that position which justifies the benefit of the doubt being exercised in their favour. It is absolutely necessary that the heads of charge should show clearly and distinctly what the exposition of the law actually was. Where the Judge suggested in his charge that if the Jury did not believe the defence version, they must automatically accept the prosecution story as true, and while dealing with the law, he merely read and explained some sections of the Penal Code, but did not make out to the Jury what the law actually was: Held, that the Judge should have explained that both versions might be false, and if the Jury were not satisfied that the defence version was true, they were by no means to regard this as helping the prosecution to establish the truth of their version. Madan Tilakdas v. Emperor.

It is necessary for Judges to warn the Jury that when charges of a sexual criminal character are brought against an accused person in a Criminal Court without corroborating evidence, then the Jury must be told that whereas after due and careful consideration they are entitled to accept that uncorroborated evidence, it is rarely safe to do so and for the good reason which exists in all charges of this character made by women against men and more especially when the person accused is the subject of dislike or enmity on the part of those connected with the woman or on the part of the woman herself. This want of caution on the part of a Judge in cases of a sexual nature vitiates in law to a considerable degree a charge to a Jury, however good in other respects. *Sarat Chandra Chakravarty v. —————Jury—Charge to Jury in form of judgment—Opinions given as definite facts.

In a case under S. 304, Penal Code, the charge to the Jury was in form and was nothing less than a judgment. The Judge did not make any attempt to explain any law to the Jury and gave no explanation of what constitutes an offence under S. 304. He summed up the evidence in the manner of a judgment and throughout gave his conclusions and opinions as definite facts. At the very end of the charge, he rendered lip-service to the duties which have been enjoined on him. The whole charge was vitiated by a strong bias in favour of the prosecution and a strong bias against the defence. The disputed evidence was not submitted to the Jury in detail and the whole evidence was full of discrepancies and was sufficiently dubious: Held, that the charge was very defective and should not have been delivered in such a manner, and it would be unjust to uphold the conviction by a Judge whose charge to the Jury was open to such severe criticism. *Fateh Muhammad v. Finally she was taken to a hut in a field where she was raped by K and other people and eventually she was made over to M who took her to his house and there raped her. All of them were tried jointly: Held, that the joint trial was illegal as subsequent acts committed by K and M were not committed in the course of the same transaction: Held, further, that even supposing the joint trial to be legal, it was in no sense compulsory, and the Judge would have been well advised to try separately inasmuch as M and K were liable to be prejudiced by the admission of evidence which was quite irrelevant so far as the charges against them were concerned. *Bhola Sardar v. If, in the course of some quarrel, arising accidentally, among persons who have collected to witness a festival, there happens to be a fight, and if some people inflict injury on others, without any common object, they would be committing different offences of hurt. But if they do not act with any common intention, it cannot be said that they have caused hurt in the course of the 'same transaction,' although all the persons committing the offences are there at the one and same place and at the same time. The charges of murder are charges of the offences of the same kind, but the charge of grievous hurt is not. Moreover, though the charges of murder may be legally tried together under S. 234, Cr. P. The attention of the Jury was drawn to the position that there was, on the evidence, no question of exceeding the right of private defence and also of presence of grave and sudden provocation: Held, that there was neither misdirection nor non-direction which could result in prejudice to the accused or miscarriage of justice. *Emperor v. ———Jury—Misdirection.

In a trial for rioting, it is one thing to say that the common object was to get possession of the disputed land, and it is quite another thing to say that the common object was to beat apparently for the mere pleasure of beating. It is quite wrong to include those two contradictory cases at the same trial even more so in one charge. Consequently, where the Judge tells the Jury that in the event of the prosecution failing to establish the case with which they came into Court or in the event of the Jury being unable to come to a decision on the real point at issue between the parties, they were to consider the possibility as to the existence of another common object merely because certain persons were injured and weapons used. to omit delivering a serious caution to the jury with regard to accepting the uncorroborated evidence of a woman to support a sexual charge against an accused person. The way the rule has developed now is that the presiding Judge should tell the jury that they ought to scrutinise the uncorroborated evidence of the woman or girl with the greatest possible care, because it has been found by experience extending over many years that it is often dangerous that a man should be convicted on such uncorroborated testimony. *Sikandar Mian v. —Jury—Stolen goods in possession of accused—Presumption—Rebuttal—Jury, charge to—Misdirection.

In a case where the evidence of the guilt of an accused as a thief or dacoit rests upon discovery of stolen property from his possession and which is tried by the Jury, the proper course is to direct that the Jury are entitled to take the explanation offered by the accused of his possession. It is not the law that if the prosecution succeeds in proving possession by the accused of recently stolen goods, it is his duty to prove his innocence, and that the presumption raised of his guilt cannot be rebutted by mere denial. Such a statement of the law laid down by a Judge in his charge to the Jury amounts to a misdirection which vitiates the charge. Kabatulla v. Emperor.

The accused were charged with offences punishable under Ss. 395 and 399, Penal Code. They were further charged with a conspiracy to commit both those offences. The Jury brought in a unanimous verdict of 'not guilty'. The Judge acquitted all the accused persons of the main charges and then proceeded to convict them of an offence punishable under S. 395 read with S. 120-B, holding that the Jury were assessors and that he was entitled to take a contrary view. It was contended that the trial was with Jury and not with assessors and the Judge had no jurisdiction to convict them in the face of the verdict of acquittal: Held, that in the absence of a notification of the Local Government directing that such an offence is triable by Jury, the trial was not vitiated in view of the fact that the normal procedure

Where, in a trial of an offence, a Magistrate entirely overlooks some facts which would carry the case beyond his jurisdiction and tries the accused for a lesser offence, he is not held to have acted without jurisdiction. The question whether he has or has not entirely overlooked the circumstances is one of fact. If, on the other hand, he does not overlook the circumstances, but, after his attention has been drawn to it, he deliberately ignores it, his proceedings would be improper though not void. When the accused has himself objected to the jurisdiction, the High Court would feel itself bound to interfere. Requisition of persons from outside the Court to make up the deficiency in the number of jurors to be empanelled is not proper, and as this is an irregularity which affects the constitution of the Court, there must be a re-trial. If the Court has to make up deficiency of jurors, he is to select persons actually present in Court whom he considers suitable. —Jury—Jury and distinction—Assessors—Distinction.

The fundamental conception underlying all jury trials is that the jury are there actually to try the case and not merely to aid the Judge in arriving at a conclusion. They are invested with a special status and given special powers, and the ultimate responsibility for all decisions within their sphere is meant to be theirs and theirs alone. No charge is delivered to the assessors ; on the contrary, the Judge is given a discretion to "sum up" the evidence for the prosecution and the defence or not as he thinks fit. He has not got anything like the same freedom of action in a jury trial. If he agrees with the verdict, then of course, no difficulty arises, but if he disagrees, then his hands are very considerably tied. In the first place, he has no powers of acquittal or conviction or even of ordering a fresh trial. He can only "submit the case" to the High Court. But even this he cannot do merely because he disagrees. He has to be "clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice" to submit the case. Dattatraya Sadashiv Karve v. Emperor.

—Jury—Misdirection.

If the defence relies upon certain omissions made by witnesses either before the Police or before the Magistrate, the best course is to draw the attention of the Jury to those alleged omissions and then if, in the opinion of the Judge, the omissions are of no consequence and were possibly due to certain circumstances, it will be quite open to him to place them before the jury and then leave them to decide whether those omissions considered in the light of the circumstances placed before them are of such consequence as to discredit the testimony of the witnesses in Court. General observations devoid of facts in the charge to the jury are likely at some occasions to create an impression in the mind of the jury that every omission in every case is of no consequence whatsoever. *Bulak Gope v. But as it appeared that the deceased and his men did attack the accused while the accused were not free from blame, in awarding sentences consideration may legitimately be given to that fact that they were really in the right at first and were performing a legitimate duty in taking the cattle of the deceased and others to the pound which had strayed into their land, although in doing so, they exceeded the right of private defence of person and property. It is a rule of universal application that in a criminal trial, Counsel for the prosecution in opening the case to the Jury, can only state all that it is proposed or intended to prove in the case so that the Jury may see if there is any discrepancy between the opening statements of Counsel and the evidence afterwards adduced in support of them and that it is wholly improper for Counsel for the prosecution to open any matter to the Jury in respect whereof no evidence is intended to be or can be adduced at the trial. The accused were put on their trial in connection with a murder. They were convicted of conspiracy to commit an offence punishable under S. 326, Penal Code, which was one of the many charges brought against them. The Jury returned a verdict of 'not guilty' and on being asked by the Judge if they had to add anything, they returned a verdict of 'guilty of conspiracy' by a bare majority. The Judge never explained to the jury the implication of a conspiracy to commit an offence under S. 326, and he did not put the evidence before the Jury at all with reference to this charge. The evidence did not prove a conspiracy to commit an offence under S. 326 : Held, that the conviction could not be upheld as there was never any evidence to support the particular conspiracy of which the appellants have been found guilty : Held, further that as the accused had a long and a protracted trial and the Jury were not satisfied that the main charges relating to the actual assault were made out against them, a new trial should not be ordered. *Mohammad Shariff Khan v. In a murder case where an accused has failed to give any explanation of the suspicious circumstances against him, it is better to treat the circumstances as establishing a crime as a point of fact. Evidence of this nature would certainly in England be left to a Jury by a Judge. The question in each case is whether circumstantial evidence of this nature satisfies a Jury of the guilt of the accused under S. 302, Penal Code. The question is not one of law. *Mangal Singh v. The test, whether a trial is or is not bad owing to a misjoinder of charges, is not the number of offences of which the accused has been convicted. It is the number of offences with which he has been charged. The trial is bad, not because the accused has been wrongly convicted but because he has been wrongly tried. It is the multiplicity of charges which vitiates the trial and prejudices the accused in his defence. Special considerations attach to a charge of conspiracy and things done in pursuance thereof. In many cases, the offence of conspiracy is only provable by proof of the offences done in pursuance thereof. If the proof of these offences can be used to prove the conspiracy, it follows that it is only reasonable they can be proved as substantive offences

Every accused person is entitled to be presumed to be innocent till there is evidence of his guilt; and the presumption ought not to be too easily displaced and it may be right to have regard to the position in life of the accused in considering whether it is displaced. It is not easy for a Magistrate to keep his mind entirely free from prejudice when the record and Police papers show that the prisoner in the dock is an ex-convict. But the provision of S. 310, Cr. C. whereby, in Sessions trials, all knowledge of previous conviction is rightly withheld from Jurors and Assessors until after the accused has either pleaded, or been found guilty, indicate the importance of the complete exclusion of such knowledge when weighing the evidence as to the truth or otherwise of the main charge. The principle underlying this legal provision may also be seen in S. 54, Evidence Act, under which a previous conviction is declared inadmissible against an accused person except where evidence of bad character is relevant. *Maung E Gyi v. persons, he is practically bound to commit both the cases to the Court of Session, and leave to that Court to attempt to discover which of the two stories is true. The Sessions Court has then to try two cases instead of one, and the Government Pleader prosecuting is faced with the difficulty of pressing before the Court with equal assiduity two cases which cannot both be true. When each case ends in a conviction, and there are appeals, the Government Advocate finds himself here also in an extremely difficult position, since it is clearly impossible for him to urge the correctness of both the opposing versions, and it is extremely difficult for him to decide which case to represent as the correct one. *Mangali v. It is not the duty of a prosecution to adopt an attitude of non-committal to any version of the case and to examine all witnesses alleged to have known something about the offence, whether or not they will support the prosecution case and whether or not the prosecution regards them as true or false. The prosecution ought to put forward a definite case and refrain from calling witnesses whom it regards as false or unnecessary. —————Procedure—Jurisdiction.

Though a civil suit and criminal prosecution may be based on exactly the same cause of action, the parties are not the same. The burden of proof is differently placed and different considerations may come in. The result may, therefore, be a conflict in decision. The risk of such conflict is one that is inherent in the division of causes into criminal and civil. The judgment of neither Court is binding on the other and each must decide the cause on the evidence before it. The fact therefore that the matter in issue had already been decided in favour of the accused in a civil suit between the same parties does not debar the Criminal Court from taking cognizance of the case and holding a trial. *Maung Po Nwe v. Where an accused has committed murder and has preferred a false complaint of murder immediately after committing the murder, it cannot be said that strictly speaking a joint trial held for the two offences under Ss. 302 and 211, Penal Code, is illegal. It can be fairly contended that the two acts were connected together and formed part of the same transaction. But offences of this nature ought not to be tried together because it is obviously very embarrassing to the accused to have to answer a charge of murder at the same time as a charge of wilfully preferring a false complaint of murder. In re : Uppara Dodda Narasa.

———Preliminary enquiry—Accused, whether bound to disclose his defence—No inference from non-disclosure—Failure of the essentials of prosecution case—Theories consistent with innocence to be accepted.

There is no duty cast upon an accused person to disclose his defence in the course of a preliminary enquiry, and no inference can be drawn against the accused from non-disclosure of his defence at that stage. Where the essentials of the case for the prosecution fail and the Court has to rest the case for conviction, not upon evidence, direct or circumstantial, but upon one or two alternative theories, and where one of the said theories is consistent with innocence and the other inconsistent, there is no justification for accepting the theory which is inconsistent with such innocence. The purpose of a criminal trial is not to support at all costs a theory but to investigate the offence and to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused, and the duty of a Public Prosecutor is to represent not the Police but the Crown and this duty should be discharged fairly and fearlessly and with a full sense of the responsibility attaching to this position. In a capital case, it is the duty of the Crown to place before the Court all materials irrespective of the question as to whether they help the accused or go against him, and it has been rightly observed that the rule is not merely a technical one but founded on common sense and humanity. *Kunja Subudhi v. Repugnancy in record—Conspiracy, trial for—Two conspirators—Separate trials—Acquittal of one—Conviction of other, whether sustainable—English principle, application of—Appeal against conviction.

In the absence of provision in the Indian Statute Law, the Courts are not bound to follow the rule of English Law that repugnancy or contradiction on the face of the record is a ground for quashing the conviction. Repugnancy in the verdict of the Jury in India is not by itself a sufficient ground for quashing a conviction, and there is no provision in the Cr. P. C. justifying interference with a conviction on the ground of repugnancy in the record. In India, the acquittal of one of two alleged conspirators in a subsequent trial, does not form the ground of reversal of the conviction of the other tried before. However, if on the merits it is established on appeal by the other conspirator, that the evidence against him is weak or there are inherent improbabilities or infirmities in the case against him, then perhaps the fact that the same witnesses were disbelieved in a subsequent trial may be

A Court of Appeal or revision in dealing with a question of misjoinder, must look to the position as it appeared when charges were framed. In deciding whether charges were rightly framed, one must look at the position as it appeared to the Magistrate, when he framed them. Where an inference adverse to an accused person can be drawn from a number of circumstances, if the accused person is unable to offer any explanation which is compatible with his innocence or if it is proved that any explanation which he offers is false, that is a further circumstance from which an inference can be drawn against him, but it is unsafe to hold that an accused person is necessarily guilty because he is making a false statement. S. 106, Evidence Act, obviously refers to cases where the defence of the accused depends on his proving a certain fact, that is, cases where his guilt is established on the evidence produced by the prosecution unless he is able to prove some other facts especially within his knowledge which would render the evidence for the prosecution nugatory. *Ram Bharosey v. -----Procedure, propriety of—Confession—Recording of—Confession not recorded properly—Magistrate taking down confession called as witness.

In the matter of construction, Ss. 164 and 364, Cr. P. C., must be looked at and construed together and it would be an unnatural construction to hold that any other procedure was permitted than that which is laid down with such minute particular in the sections themselves. The practice of allowing Magistrates as witnesses to depose to confessions is improper and that where matters could be put on record and would be admissible when so put, there are the strongest reasons of policy for supposing that the Legislature designed that such matters should be available in that form and in no other. *Nahru v. -----Procedure—Repudiation by prosecution of documents filed and witnesses relied on at earlier stage, propriety of—Filing of documents by prosecution in anticipation of defence, legality of.

In a criminal case it is not open to the prosecution to put forward documents and witnesses as proving part of their case and then at the last moment to repudiate them all and start a new case altogether. The prosecution ought to put forward from the beginning its real case and stick to it throughout. It is not a proper procedure for the prosecution to file documents which the defence relies on for the purpose of discrediting them before the defence has had a chance to file them for itself, inasmuch as such a course is in effect permitting the prosecution to call evidence in rebuttal of the accused's defence, a practice wholly unauthorised and not admitted by the Cr. In a clear case of this kind the Tribunal should take this into account as a circumstance of aggravation in awarding the sentence. Where the suggestion is made by the legal practitioner without reasonable cause, the legal practitioner is guilty of the grossest professional misconduct. ———Re-trial—Evidence.

In a trial for murder, the recorded evidence in the Sessions Court included some evidence which should not have been admitted to record as being inadmissible under S. 122, Evidence Act, and some evidence was also totally inconsistent with other evidence. The statements of the prosecution witnesses before trial were inconsistent and the Committing Magistrate had directed two of them to be prosecuted for perjury and they were examined at the trial on a date when presumably they might have been standing their trial for perjury. This fact was not noted by the trial Judge. Further, Counsel for the accused and the Court did not consult all records available: Held, that there was no fair trial for the accused and that he should, under S. 376, Cr. P. C., be directed to be re-tried. Najab Gul Mohammad v. Emperor.

CRIMINAL TRIAL

———Sessions Judge, duty of, to take interest in case from very beginning of trial—Revenue Officials—Prosecution before departmental enquiry, propriety of.

During trials, Sessions Judges rely far too much on a badly instructed Government Pleader or on the evidence of the prosecution shaping itself as best it may. It is much to be desired that a Sessions Judge should start his interest in a case at the very beginning of the trial and not when the time comes to write or dictate the judgment. First of all, the ingredients of an offence ought to be clearly grasped and then attempts made continuously to discover whether the evidence of the complainant and that of the prosecution witnesses did satisfy those ingredients or not. It is unfortunate that a private person can prosecute a patwari without any departmental inquiry being made on the subject. Some kind of protection should be given to these Revenue Officials by making a departmental inquiry necessary before a criminal prosecution is launched. Suraj Prasad v. Emperor.

Where an insolvent was fined and another person paid the amount of the fine and the sentence of fine was reversed by the High Court: Held, that the person who paid the fine on behalf of the accused was not entitled to claim the money back from the Crown. His right was only against the insolvent's estate and whether he was entitled to claim it back in whole or in part would depend on whether he made a present of it to the insolvent or merely lent it to him. *Hiralal Jindani v. ———Sentence—Previous convictions, whether may be taken into account in assessing sentence—English and Indian practice.

In England as well as in India, the law makes a distinction between the question of the guilt or innocence and the question, arising after conviction, of assessment of the punishment which ought to be imposed. On the first question, the rules of evidence are strictly enforced and only matters properly relevant to that question can be proved. But in assessing punishment, the Court takes into consideration not only the nature and the circumstances of the crime itself but also matters extraneous to that crime. These may be matters concerning the accused himself, such as his character and antecedents, or matters which have no direct relation to him, such as the state of crime in the country generally or in the particular locality. *Emperor v. viction, the High Court thinks that though on merits the conviction is right but the sentence is rather too severe, the correct procedure is that when the appeal first comes on for hearing, it should not be dismissed summarily, but should be directed to stand over, and at the same time, notice should be served on Government on the revisional powers conferred upon the Court by S. 439, Cr. P. C., to show cause why the sentence should not be reduced. The notice and the appeal will then be heard on the same day. If after hearing the Government Pleader, the Court comes to the conclusion that the sentence ought to be reduced, it can be reduced under the revisional powers. Bai Dhankor v. Emperor.

He then put to the prisoner the previous convictions, and on his admitting them, took into consideration the existence of such previous convictions and passed a sentence which was legal even without proof of the said previous convictions: Held, that the sentence was legal, even though the same was influenced by a consideration of the gravity of the offence for which the prisoner had previously been convicted. *Subramanian v. -----Transfer—Informality of proceedings—Duty of Magistrates—Magistrate calling to witnesses to his chamber—Transfer application on the ground that he induced them to give evidence against applicant: Held, application should be allowed.

Although there may be a certain informality about proceedings due to local conditions, Magistrates must be careful that this informality is not such as to lead or reasonably to appear to lead to favour partiality or injustice or to affect or to appear to affect the substance of justice. Where the Magistrate calls two of the complainant's witnesses for interview in his Chamber and the complainant thereupon files a transfer application on the ground that the Magistrate induced them not to give evidence against the accused, the application must be allowed as the circumstances are such as to give rise to reasonable apprehension in the mind of the complainant that his case will be prejudiced if it is heard further by that Magistrate. Kazi Muhammad v. Harkishendass. 38 Cr. L. J. 500 : 168 I. C. 44 : 29 S. L. R. 329 : 9 R. S. 217 : A. I. R. 1937 Sind 65.

-----Transfer.

It is an elementary principle of natural justice that an accused person shall have free access at any time during the trial to all the records which are before the Court. The same considerations apply to the refusal to permit reference in cross-examination to the contents of the charge-sheet, for, this also forms part of the committal record. The defence Pleaders should be allowed to see the records of statements made by the prosecution witnesses to a Magistrate under the provisions of S. 164, Cr. P. C., or to cross-examine the witnesses thereon. Where the Judge declined to grant all these privileges to the defence: Held, that this created an apprehension in the mind of the accused that he would not get the fair trial and hence the case should be transferred. Brahmayya v. The King. 40 Cr. L. J. 265 : 179 I. C. 783 : 11 R. Rang. 347 : A. I. R. 1938 Rang. 442.

-----Transfer—Judge taking proceedings for contempt—Transfer.

CRIMINAL TRIAL

Where after hearing of the day was finished, the accused was called back and convicted under S. 228, Penal Code, and apprehending that he might not get a fair trial, he applied for transfer: Held, that the mere conviction of the accused by the Judge did not warrant the transfer of the Sessions case from his Court. Salag Ram v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 416 (b) : 167 I. C. 515 : 9 R. A. 550 : 1936 A. W. R. 967 : A. I. R. 1937 All. 174.

-----Transfer—Magistrate calling for defence list prematurely—Transfer, ground for.

Strictly speaking, the accused cannot be called upon to enter into his defence until all the prosecution witnesses have been exhausted, and till then under the law, the Magistrate cannot ask the accused to file the list of his defence witnesses. But the mere fact that he is called upon to submit the list before the cross-examination of all prosecution witnesses is not an irregularity which will afford sufficient ground for transfer. Ishar Singh v. Shama Dasadh. 38 Cr. L. J. 484 : 167 I. C. 881 : 17 P. L. T. 627 : 3 B. R. 379 : 9 R. P. 449 : A. I. R. 1937 Pat. 131.

-----Transfer—Proceedings before Bench Court—Application for transfer on ground of difficult question arising—Procedure.

If a Bench Court thinks that a case pending before it should be transferred to the file of some other Court, on the ground that the case involves difficult questions which cannot be properly tried by a Bench, it should move the matter officially and not leave it to the party to move. In re: V. A. Gopal Nair. 29 Cr. L. J. 123 : 106 I. C. 715 : A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 403.

-----Transfer—Refusing securities on insufficient grounds.

An action of the Magistrate in persistently refusing to accept the securities and refusing to allow bail to the accused, is such as can reasonably create an apprehension in the mind of the applicant that he will not get a fair trial in the district, and in matters like this, considerations of justice must prevail over those of convenience. Brij Mohan Pandey v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 105 : 165 I. C. 873 : 1936 O. W. N. 1232 : 1936 O. L. R. 691 : 9 R. O. 266 : A. I. R. 1937 Oudh 79.

-----Transfer—Transfer application admitted—Stay order implied.

Where the High Court admits an application for transfer, invariably, there is an order of stay of proceedings. Even if the order is not expressly made, it is implied, because it will be meaningless to issue a rule and send for the record and then allow the proceedings in the lower Court to continue. *Ishar Singh v. But if after admitting the evidence about the real age of such person, the Jury are not satisfied with it and come to the conclusion that the entry is not a genuine one, there is no misdirection as the only effect of such evidence would have been to give them an opportunity of bringing in an improper verdict of not guilty, if they would have been satisfied with it and such evidence would not have

When a Court orders the release of an accused under S. 500, Cr. P. C., it has no right or power to put any restrictions on the accused's movements. Therefore, an order of the Magistrate that the accused should be kept in the Mahila Ashram, relieves the surety of his responsibility under the bond as the accused in such a case is not actually "released." While the prosecution must prove the guilt of the accused, there is no such burden laid on the accused to prove his innocence and it is sufficient for him to raise a doubt as to his guilt, he is not bound to satisfy the Jury of his innocence. It is a serious error of law when a Judge while rightly putting the burden of proof of the guilt of the accused upon the prosecution, wrongly puts the proof of their innocence upon the accused, and where such an error appears to colour the whole of his charge to the Jury and finds expression in specific misdirections to the Jury in certain passages, accused are sure to be prejudiced, and therefore the verdict of the Jury and the convictions of the accused should not be allowed to stand. *Shewaram Jethanand Shivdasani v. Mere evidence that proceedings under S. 110, Cr. P. C. were pending against the accused is not evidence of bad character. The failure of a Judge to point out to the Jury that the deceased had not been cross-examined cannot have much effect as the Jury know perfectly well that the deceased had not been cross-examined and after they have spent several days in hearing the case after conducting an investigation into the manner in which the accused had been performing his work came to the conclusion that he committed defalcations of money paid in as fines by persons convicted before the Honorary Magistrates. The accused was the relation of the District Magistrate, the acts that gave rise to the complaint occurred 10 years ago and the case, had it come up for trial, would certainly have been a cause celebre. The complainant objected to the case being tried by the Magistrate on the ground that he himself would have to be called as witness in the trial and prayed for its transfer. The case should be transferred to some other Court; for the existence of such an apprehension in the mind of one of the parties must militate against a proper trial, if for no other reason than that it places the party concerned under a very serious handicap. *Maung Chit Tin v. ———Trial by Jury—Misdirection—Interference by High Court when warranted.

It is not in every case when the charge to the Jury is open to criticism in matters of detail that the High Court will interfere in appeal. Language may be used too broadly or not happy in its expression; but the essential point for consideration is whether the case against the accused has been fairly brought to their notice which may appropriately guide them in deciding whether the accused is guilty or innocent. When there are more than one accused, it is in the first degree essential both that the Jury should be asked for a separate finding regarding each of the accused and that particulars of the evidence affecting each person should be placed in a manner which may enable the Jury to distinguish the cases of accused as against whom the evidence is not of the same degree of cogency. *Yusuf Mia v. A Judge in his charge to the Jury, not only may but should let his opinion appear, provided that he leaves the decision fairly to the Jury and does not take it out of their hands. The essential test in a case of misdirection is to see as to whether the Judge usurps the Jury's function. Where a Judge in his charge has set out the defence case and discussed the evidence led in support of it at great length, and has left the decision on every point to the Jury; the mere fact that his presentation of it was at times coloured by the view he had formed, does not amount to misdirection. *Abdul Gafur Kotwal v. On this vital ingredient of S. 366, Penal Code, the Judge gave absolutely no assistance to the Jury. It was objected that this was a misdirection at the very outset; that the case was in reality far from simple, and that the Judge in calling it a simple case was suggesting to the Jury that they would have no difficulty in finding it a true case: Held, that the Judge struck the right note in reminding the Jury that the issue before them was a plain and simple one. It was impossible to read into these words the sinister intention which was suggested. Abdul Gafur Kotwal v. Emperor.

———Trial by Jury—Sexual offence—Judge not warning Jury of danger of convicting on uncorroborated story of girl—Whether non-direction.

It is extremely dangerous and permissible only in exceptional cases to convict a man of a sexual offence on the uncorroborated testimony of the complainant. The corroboration must be by independent evidence, that is to say, by some additional evidence coming from another person altogether, and the Rule must be properly emphasized in the charge to the Jury. Failure to warn the Jury of the danger of convicting the accused on the girl's evidence alone amounts to a non-direction, which vitiates the trial. Sachinder Rai v. Emperor.

———Trial by Jury—Sexual offence—Proper direction.

In trials for sexual offences, the Judge should tell the Jury that if the girl was immoral, it made her story of abduction and deceit less probable and that of the accused that she had a love affair with him more probable. Where this aspect of the case has not been put to the Jury, it constitutes, misdirection. The necessity cannot be too strongly emphasised for charging the Jury in cases of this nature with extreme care, for experience has shown that Juries in this country are most liable to misunderstand the law on the subject and to misapply it. *Sachinder Rai v. CRIMINAL TRIAL ———Trial by Jury—Statement reduced to writing by Police during investigation—Dacoity trial—Identification of stolen property—List of property taken by Sub-Inspector, admission of—Misdirection to Jury—Re-trial.

In his charge to the Jury in a Sessions trial for dacoity, the Judge asked the Jurors to attach weight to a list of stolen properties dictated to a Police Sub-Inspector by one of the prosecution witnesses in the course of investigation, and remarked that the material objects before the Jury were identifiable as the property of the witness; Held, (1) that the document should not have been admitted in evidence under S. 167 (2) that the Judge's reference to it constituted such a material misdirection that a re-trial of the accused was necessary. *Vellaya Rowther v. ———Trial by Jury—Statements to Police—Duty of Judge in giving directions on point of their reliability.

The giving of advice to the Jury to treat all kinds of statements to the Police as of one level of unreliability, should be deprecated. If it is the prosecution case that the Sub-Inspector's notes in any particular instance are unreliable, that should be brought out in the course of the evidence of the particular officer or it may appear on the face of the notes themselves. Cr. P. C. requires the Court to refer to the statement as a preliminary to directing that the accused should have a copy, and whether the statements are exhibited or not, it is constantly found that only by reference to them can it be understood what is really meant by the answers elicited from the witness or the Sub-Inspector in cross-examination. But whether a discrepancy or omission is effective to contradict a witness in any particular case, depends on the nature of the fact in question as well as the fullness with which the statement had been recorded. An omission may amount to contradiction, if the matter omitted was one which the witness would have been expected to mention and the Sub-Inspector to make a note of in the ordinary course. Yusuf Mia v. Emperor.

In those cases where the accused is undefended or where he is defended by an incompetent Counsel or is too poor to engage the services of a competent lawyer, his case cannot generally be adequately placed before the Jury by means of arguments. If, however, in such cases the Judge has properly charged the Jury, the mere fact that the case has not been adequately argued on behalf of the accused cannot by itself be a good ground for ordering a re-trial. On the same principle, a re-trial should not be ordered, unless it can be shown that matters which Counsel would have placed, have not been placed before the Jury or that the charge of the Judge is defective and erroneous in material particulars. *Samarendra Kumar Chakravarty v. CRIMINAL TRIAL —————Trial by Jury—Defence taken by accused in the alternative, inconsistent—Inference.

In a criminal trial, the presumption of innocence is always in favour of the accused till he is found guilty, and he is also entitled to the benefit of a reasonable doubt. Even if the defences taken up by the accused in the alternative were inconsistent, that would not necessarily prove that the evidence led on behalf of the prosecution, who must establish the guilt of the accused, should have been believed by the jury. *Emperor v. The effect of, and the inference to be drawn or not to be drawn from the absence of relevant witnesses from the witness-box is a matter to be considered with reference to the circumstances of each particular case and the facts which the witnesses, if called, would have been required to prove; and the Jury should be asked to consider it in the light of the particular circumstances and facts. No rule can be laid down to fetter the discretion of the prosecution to call witnesses which is dependent on the particular circumstances of each case. Still less can any rule be laid down to discourage the utmost candour and fairness on the part of those conducting prosecutions; but at the same time they will not in general approve of an idea that a prosecution must call witnesses, irrespective of considerations of number and of reliability, or that a prosecution, ought to discharge the functions both of prosecution and defence. If it is so, confusion is very apt to result, and never is it more likely to result than if the prosecution calls witnesses and then proceeds almost automatically to discredit them by cross-examination. Witnesses essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution is based, must, of course, be called by the prosecution, whether in the result, the effect of their testimony is for or against the case for the prosecution. Stephen Sencviratne v The King.

———S. 19 (1)—Revision.

A member of a declared criminal tribe was convicted under S. 19 (1), Criminal Tribes Act, and sentenced only to whipping for being absent from his village without leave, and thereby committing a breach of the rules. The District Magistrate reported the case to the Chief Court on the ground that the sentence was illegal because under S. 19 (1), Criminal Tribes Act, as amended by Act II of 1897, a sentence of imprisonment must form part of the substantive sentence, and the accused having two previous convictions against him, deserved no consideration. The Chief Court declined to interfere on the ground that though under S. 5, as amended, of the Criminal Tribes Act, imprisonment should have been awarded, the convicting Magistrate might have considered sentence of imprisonment only sufficient, and the sentence of whipping being carried out, no enhancement was desirable. *Emperor v. S. 23, Criminal Tribes Act, does not lay down any substantive offence and it is, therefore, inaccurate to speak of a conviction under that section. All that it provides is minimum sentences in certain contingencies unless there are special reasons to the contrary. Moreover, the section does not require that the two previous convictions should have been convictions under S. 23, Criminal Tribes Act. It only requires that the member of a Criminal Tribe should have been previously convicted of any of the offences in the Penal Code, specified in Sch. I of the Act and should again be convicted of the same or of any other such offence. Harjan v. Emperor.

—————Necessity of proof—Declaration, recorded by Magistrate—Necessity of proof—Evidence Act (I of 1872), S. 32—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Sch. XLI.

A dying declaration recorded by a Magistrate cannot be accepted in evidence unless it is proved by the statement of the Magistrate. The mere fact that the Magistrate who recorded the statement, was also the Committing Magistrate in the case would not dispense with the necessity of proving the dying declaration. Dying declarations are not covered by the provisions of Chap. XLI, Cr. P. C., and there is nothing in S. 32, Evidence Act, to justify a Court in going beyond the ordinary rule that every statement placed on the record must be properly proved. Ghazi v. Emperor.

—————Proof of—Declaration not bearing signature of deceased whether admissible—Proof, oral testimony of person who may have heard it.

A dying declaration not reduced to writing must be proved by the oral evidence of any person who heard it. When a Police Officer is testifying to such a declaration, he can refresh his memory by reference to the notes he may have made or read at the time. Such notes, to be themselves admissible in evidence as proof of the statement made then by the dying person, must bear the signature of the deponent. Bhagwan v. Emperor.

No sensible Jury would refuse to accept the portion of the dying declaration corroborated by a mass of evidence merely because the deceased told a lie in his own interest and no direction nor any provision of the law would, in fact, ever prevent a Jury from believing it, if they saw fit to do so. *Naimud-Din Biswas v. —Rr. 21-A, 28—Conviction for attempting to melt sovereigns.

The shop of accused No. 1 was raided by the Police who found a furnace ready heated, and on it a crucible containing molten silver and near it a large number of sovereigns in an open dish or receptacle so placed as to be ready for transfer to the crucible ; he was convicted of attempting to melt sovereigns under rules 2-A and 28 of the Defence of India Consolidation Rules, 1915. A person cannot be convicted under the Defence of India Consolidation Rules of 1915, without the written consent of the authority mentioned in r. 30 of the rules to initiate proceedings against him. A and B were tried and convicted of offences under rr. 21-A and 28 of the Defence of India Consolidation Rules, 1915. It was found that the consent in writing required by rule 30 authorised proceedings against A alone and that it did not specify the offence for which he was to be tried : Held, (1) that B's conviction was illegal and must be set aside ; (2) that the defect in the consent did not invalidate the proceedings as regards A. *Abu Hasan v. —Ss. 8, 11—Effect of—High Court, power of superintendence of, over Commissioners appointed under Defence of India Act—Governor-General in Council, power of.

The Defence of India Act does not purport to take away any existing powers of superintendence of the High Court, but merely creates a new Court which shall be independent of the High Court. The power of superintendence conferred on the High Court by S. 15, High Courts Act, is confined to superintendence over those Courts which are subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. The Special Tribunals created under the Defence of India Act, are by the very Act which created them, subject to no appellate jurisdiction whatever. It is clearly expressed by S. 8, Defence of India Act, that the decision of the Commissioners appointed under the Act should be final and conclusive and that no other Court should have any power of interference either by way of appeal, revision or in any other way whatsoever. The Governor-General in Council had power to pass the Defence of India Act providing for the creation of new Courts of criminal jurisdiction independent of the control or superintendence of the High Courts. It is within the legislative powers of the Governor-General in council to amend or alter the Letters Patent of a High Court and to direct that a particular Court shall not be subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, thereby removing a condition which is essential to the exercise of the power of superintendence granted by S. 15, High Courts Act. *Sheo Nandan Prashad Singh v. Held, on facts that the accused in laying the additional line from the former position of the meter up to its new position, was laying “works” within the meaning of S. 44 (b), and he laid that line for the purpose of connecting it with other works belonging to the licensee, namely the old supply line which terminated at the original position of the meter. His act, therefore, clearly amounted to an offence within the meaning of S. 44 (b): Held, further, that as the accused broke open the seals which had been placed by the company upon the meter, his act clearly amounted to an offence under r. 31 (1), Electricity Rules. Rule 31 of the Electricity Rules does not deal with cases which S. 26 (5) contemplates but deals with the tampering with the seals placed on a meter which is already working. There is, therefore, no conflict between r. 31 and S. 26, Sub-s. (5). M. A. Bhagwati v. Emperor.

S. 47, Electricity Act, deals in terms with default in complying with any of the provisions of the Act, or with any order issued under it, or, in the case of a licensee, with any of the conditions of his licence, but it does not deal with a breach of any of the rules made under the Act. The accused was the owner of a house in which an accident occurred. A contractor was employed to lay chunam in the house, and a workman employed by the contractor, in the course of his work, broke through the lead sheathing of an electric wire and the rubber insulation by means of a metal trowel which the workman had in his hand. He thereby brought the trowel into contact with the electric wire. He was at the moment supporting himself by holding a pipe for gas, and the result was that he was electrocuted and died. The accused was prosecuted under R. 41 read with R. 107, Electricity Rules, 1911. The prosecution urged that if there is no rule imposing a penalty for a breach of R. 41, then a penalty can be imposed under S. 47: Held, that no penalty could be imposed under R. 47 as that section was not intended to deal with breaches of the rules. Further, the accused was not an owner within the meaning of the Act although he might be the owner of the defective wire in question, and Rr. 105 and 107 imposed penalties on licensees and owners who were experts and hence no penalty could be imposed on the accused for breach of the rule: Held, also that there was no rule providing a penalty for breach of rules which might easily be broken by a non-expert un-—Degrees of.

The amount of doubt that arises in the mind of a man may be of different degrees. It is only where there is a reasonable doubt about the guilt of an accused person that he is entitled to an acquittal. Doubts will always arise in human mind but all doubts are not entitled to respect. There may be a doubt which is less than a reasonable doubt, but which is still a doubt that is entitled to respect and which is entitled to ask a Judge to be cautious in passing the sentence. *Raggha v. DUTY OF PROSECUTION

The accused were charged with having abducted a girl who was not a minor, with the intention that she should be forced to illicit intercourse. The defence was that the girl went of her own accord. There were three stages in the case: (1) The time when the girl was kept in concealment by the accused, and was under the influence of the accused; (2) A period of three days when she was under the protection of English Officers, and was under the immediate influence of neither the accused nor her own parents; (3) The time after her return to her parents when she was under their influence. The prosecution alleged that during the second stage while the girl was living in the house of a respectable Burman official of high standing, she was compelled by the accused's mother to copy a false letter to support the case for the defence. It appeared that during the second stage the girl in the presence of respectable persons deliberated for an hour in making up her mind whether she would return to Rangoon with her own relatives or with the accused's relatives. With regard to the second stage, the prosecution tendered no evidence except that of the girl herself: Held, that in all these matters the prosecution failed in their duty. It is the duty of the prosecution to call all the persons who are shown to be connected with the transactions, and who, from such connection, must be able to give material evidence. *Emperor v. E. —Admissibility of—Taken in absence of accused.

A dying declaration recorded in the absence of the accused by a Magistrate other than the Magistrate who held the enquiry preliminary to commitment to the Court of Session, is not admissible in evidence unless and until it has been proved by the Magistrate who recorded it. A note on the order sheet that the document was admitted without any objection on the part of the accused does not make any difference. Jatindra Nath v. Emperor.

—Conviction.

A dying declaration alone is sufficient to found a conviction if, after applying the accepted tests, it is held to be true and genuine. It is not necessary that it should be corroborated otherwise. Masti Khan v. Emperor.

Whether the finding of a few spots of blood on the wearing apparel of an Indian is a sufficient corroboration of a dying statement for the purpose of supporting a conviction, must be considered on the facts of the particular case, and what is done in one case cannot be an authority in another set of facts. *Emperor v. —Deposition of witnesses hearing it—Written statement by deceased—Incomplete record of deposition—Re-trial.

It is of the utmost importance that evidence as to a dying declaration should be as exact and full as possible. Where such a declaration was heard by witnesses who spoke of it but was apparently much fuller than what the record of their depositions showed,—the Sessions Judge not having recorded all they said on the point: Held, that there must be a re-trial. When what is sought to be proved is the verbal statement of a dying person, the proper and legal mode of proving is by eliciting from the person who heard the deceased make Proceedings under S. 3, Eastern Bengal and Assam Disorderly Houses Act, are not governed by the provisions of the Cr. P. C. It is not necessary for a Magistrate in such proceedings to act only on legal evidence and he need not administer an oath to the witnesses. But before passing an order under S. 3, the Magistrate must not only be satisfied that the houses in question are used as brothels or for the purpose of habitual prostitution or as disorderly houses, but he must further find an additional fact to bring them within the provisions of Cl. (a) or (b) or (c) of S. 2 of the Act. A Magistrate has no power to take action against the keeper of a brothel under S. 3 if the place is respectably conducted, unless it is in the neighbourhood either of an educational institution or of a Cantonment so as to attract the operation of Cl. (a) or Cl. (c) of S. 2 of the Act. It is not necessary for a Magistrate who desires to proceed against several persons under S. 3 to draw up separate proceedings and hold separate ———Power of Local Government—Delegation to Collector—Delegation by Collector—Ultra vires—Rules under the Act, r. 104—Meaning of "taking measures."

Under the Act, the Government itself can give power to an officer or officers to take measures, but it cannot empower such officer or officers to delegate those powers to others unless such powers by their very nature can only be exercised through agents. The Collector has no power to delegate his own power and the Local Government has no right to empower a Collector to delegate the power which the Local Government confers upon him except in respect of performance of acts which by their very nature can be or are usually done through agents and such agents only. The power 'to take measures' under the Act, which may be granted to any person by the Local Government, is a different matter from the regulations or orders which have to be observed or obeyed by the public or a person or class of persons in respect of those measures. Rule 104 of the Regulations under the Act is ultra vires of the Local Government. Nagappa Thevan v. Emperor.

-----Scheme of the Act.

The Act is an extremely technical one, and the proper performance of its requirements demands a considerable amount of technical knowledge, and the scheme of the Act is not to impose penalties upon consumers or property owners for breaches of technical requirements of the Act except after an order requiring them to comply with certain directions, and it is only the failure to obey such orders, and not the mere non-compliance with the rules, which is made punishable. *Emperor v. -----S. 39—Scope of—Abstraction, whether necessary ingredient of S. 39.

S. 39, Electricity Act, does not say that dishonest abstraction or consumption or use of energy is theft. -----Ss. 39, 41—'Separate enactments'—General Clauses Act, S. 26.

For the purpose of S. 26, General Clauses Act, it must be taken that Ss. 39 and 44, Electricity Act, are to be considered as separate enactments. Rash Behari Shah (Hunda) v. Emperor, 38 Cr. L. J. 545 : 168 I. C. 657 : 41 C. W. N. 225 : 9 R. C. 853 : A. I. R. 1936 Cal. 753.

-----Ss. 39, 50—'At the instance of'—meaning and scope of. Offence of theft of electricity, whether offence under S. 379, Penal Code.

The phrase "at the instance of" means merely "at the solicitation of or at the request of," and the Legislature meant only that a prosecution should not be instituted by some independent busy body who had nothing to do with the matter. Theft of electricity is an offence under S. 379, Penal Code, because of S. 39, Electricity Act, it is an offence which was created by that section and the Legislature intended S. 50 to apply to an offence of this nature. Therefore, there could be no prosecution except at the instance of the person aggrieved, that is of the Electric Company. Fishcannath v. Emperor, 38 Cr. L. J. 53 : 165 I. C. 689 : 1936 A. L. principal witness was the wife of the deceased who was sleeping close by. She stated that when the shot was fired she awoke, opened her eyes and by the flash of the fire-arm recognized the accused who ran away. She at once raised her cries to the effect that the accused had killed her husband. The husband of a sister of the deceased, who was sleeping on his roof on the other side of the lane, stated that he heard a shot and then cries of deceased's when and then going down from the roof of his house, he recognized the accused. Another witness who lived at a distance of 500 farams, deposed that having heard the cries he was going to the spot when he met the accused on the way. Other evidence was to the effect that after the occurrence, the accused absconded from the village: Held, that the evidence as to identification was insufficient and the fact of accused's absconding was not inconsistent with his innocence as he might have run away in fear knowing that an incorrect accusation had been brought against him. *Ahmad v. —Admissibility.

In a case for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff due to collision with defendant's car, the plaintiff led evidence as to an admission made by one M, a passenger in the defendant's car after the collision, as to the defendant's responsibility. Counsel for the plaintiff, when this evidence was led, assumed that he could prove that the defendant was within hearing when the admission was made and stated that he had two witnesses who could depose of this fact. The trial Court ruled that its admissibility was dependent on its being shown to have been made in his hearing. It subsequently appeared, however, that this could not be shown. There was no evidence that M had authority to make such an admission. She herself denied having made it. The only questions in the case requiring detailed consideration by the Jury were those as to the contributory negligence of the plaintiff and the Jury was aware of this. New trial was sought on the ground that this evidence was wrongfully admitted: Held, that there was no admission of the evidence complained of; that when it was conditionally taken subject to proof of other matters, there was a sufficient direction that unless those conditions

It is not in every case that the prosecution is called upon to prove that a re-wiring has altered the capacity or character of old installation. It is only when there is replacement of lamps, fans, fuses, switches and other component parts of the installation that the alteration in capacity and character have to be examined. This exception, however, will not apply to electrical installation work including additions, alterations, repairs and adjustments of existing installations. house of her husband. Finally she went to reside with her paternal uncle; and while there, she contracted criminal intimacy with B, an unmarried youth of 20. In a short time, the fact of this intimacy became known, so her uncle sent her back to the house of her husband. On the day of her return, there was a feast in the house, and she put into the food cooked by her a white substance given to her by B. Her story was that she was assured by her paramour that if she administered the drug to her husband and mother-in-law, they would become submissive to her, would love her and no longer ill-treat her. She served the food mixed with the substance not merely to her husband and his mother, but to some other persons also to whom she was affectionately disposed. As soon as the guests had taken the food, several of them were taken ill and one subsequently died. A and B, were charged with murder. Where a conviction is based upon circumstantial evidence, the question always remains whether the evidence which has been believed by the Court, which heard it, is of such a nature that it ought to have been accepted as establishing the guilt of the accused person beyond reasonable possibility of doubt and this is a question which may be dealt with by a High Court upon an application for revision. *Aman Ali v. —Circumstantial evidence — Conviction for abetment on circumstantial evidence, when proper.

Though there are circumstances which throw a good deal of suspicion on the accused, he cannot be convicted on circumstantial evidence alone where the circumstances do not converge in such a manner as to outweigh the possibility of innocence of the accused. To support a conviction of murder on circumstantial evidence, the circumstances must be entirely inconsistent and incompatible with the innocence of the accused. Where an accused is convicted not of murder but of abetment of murder, a greater amount of circumstance would be required to show that though the accused was not the real murderer yet he had planned and abetted the murder. *Dinamani Udaipal Ram Tewary v. EVIDENCE —Circumstantial evidence.

In the case of circumstantial evidence, it is incumbent on the prosecution to show that it is impossible to explain the circumstances otherwise than upon the hypothesis of the accused being the guilty person. A conviction based upon circumstantial evidence alone cannot be sustained unless it can be shown beyond reasonable doubt that the guilt of the accused is the only hypothesis possible. *Lalla Prasad v. In cases depending entirely on circumstantial evidence, in order to justify an inference of guilt, the incriminating facts found against the accused must be incompatible with his innocence and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. Where the only evidence against an accused person is that he produced certain property which is identified as having been stolen from a person proved to have been murdered, and there is no admissible evidence against him to connect him more directly with the murder, it is unsafe to convict him of the offence of murder. *Raghunath v. Inasmuch as an accused cannot give evidence while on his trial, secondary evidence of an identification of a co-accused by him is clearly inadmissible. —————Corroboration—Perjury cases—Practice.

According to the Criminal Law of England, the assignment of perjury must be proved by two witnesses or by one witness and the proof of the other material and relevant facts confirming his testimony. This is not a mere technical rule but a rule founded on substantial justice. The Indian Evidence Act, however, does not provide that there must be corroboration to support a conviction. But in ordinary cases and where the provisions peculiar to Indian Law do not apply, a rule which is founded on substantial justice, may well serve as a safe guide to those who have to administer the Criminal Law in India. The rule that there must be something in a case to make the oath of the prosecution witness preferable to the oath of the accused must be satisfied. Emperor v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak.

—————Corroboration.

Where the evidence of an approver is entirely uncorroborated by any evidence to show that it was the accused who committed the offence with which he is charged, the accused cannot be convicted. The approver's evidence must be corroborated by material facts tending to point to the accused as the guilty person. Where the evidence against an accused person charged with murder consisted of only the testimony of the accomplice or approver, and the Sessions Judge convicted the accused on the ground that the Medical Certificate was consistent with the approver's statements and that marks of blood were found at the spot which the approver pointed out as the place where the deceased fell : Held, that the conviction was bad and should be set aside. In re : Muthan Papayya.

It is the duty of the trial Court to examine any witness that might throw light on the occurrences. —————Credibility—Evidence must be scrutinised on merits.

It is an elementary principle in the administration of criminal justice that want of interest in the prosecution does not by itself stamp the evidence of a witness with truth. The weight which is to be attached to the testimony of a witness depends, in a large measure, upon various considerations, some of which are that on the face of it his evidence should be so much in consonance with probabilities and consistent with other evidence, and should generally so fit in with the material details of the case for the prosecution as to carry conviction of truth to a prudent mind. If these elements are wanting in the testimony of a witness, however independent he may appear to be, his evidence should not be relied on in the decision of criminal cases where persuasion of guilt must amount to a moral certainty. *Parwali v. -----Appreciation—Tests.

It is an elementary principle in the administration of criminal justice that want of interest in the prosecution does not by itself stamp the evidence of a witness with truth. The weight which is to be attached to the testimony of a witness depends in a large measure upon various considerations, e. g., if on the face of it his evidence is so much in consonance with probabilities and consistent with other evidence, and generally so fits in with the material details of the case for the prosecution as to carry conviction of truth to a prudent mind. If these elements are wanting in the testimony of a witness, however independent he may be, his evidence is worthless and should not be relied on in the decision of criminal cases where persuasion of guilt must amount to a moral certainty. *Bageshwar v. -----Appreciation of—Prosecution witness perjury—His evidence how far to be accepted—Doubtful evidence, whether same as perjured evidence.

According to the Evidence Act, Courts have to apply the standard of a prudent man. It is also true that cases not infrequently occur in which the evidence of a witness who has made an untrue statement in some respects is accepted as regards the rest of what he states. It is not, however, in pursuance of the supposed rule that, even where a witness has been shown to have deliberately perjured himself in one part of his evidence, he may yet be considered without demur to be a truthful witness as regards the rest of his evidence which has not been proved to be false. Such a rule is as dangerous as the unrestricted application of the maxim is impracticable. The correct rule to apply in such cases is that part of the evidence of a witness, who has been guilty of untruth in some material particulars, may be accepted if such part is corroborated by probabilities and other reliable evidence which though insufficient by themselves to establish the guilt of a particular accused, nevertheless point to the truth of the statement of the witness directly implicating him. Ashiq Ali v. Emperor.

The evidence of an approver has to be most carefully analysed and considered. It must be so far above suspicion that a Court has no alternative but to accept and act upon it. ———Hostile witness.

The prosecution is not entitled to declare a witness hostile merely because he is a neighbour of the accused and does not support the prosecution story unless there is something in his deposition which conflicts with earlier statement made by him, and which would afford ground for thinking that he has been gained over by the defence. *Parmeshwar Dayal v. ———Identification—Handwriting, similarity of, how far evidence of forgery—Several offences, whether forming same transaction, substantial test to determine—Conviction, whether can be based on suspicion.

Similarity of handwriting affords some assistance in determining whether the evidence adduced to connect a certain person with the forgery can be believed but the test is by no means safe or certain, the prosecution should show that the accused was the only person who could have written the forged document. Abbas Quli Khan v. Emperor.

———Identification—Matters to be deposed to—Close scrutiny, necessity of.

The evidence as to identification ought, in each case, to be subjected to a close and careful scrutiny. It is an important factor whether all the persons identified were previously known to the witnesses or were perfect strangers to them. The time of the occurrence, the state of the light and the opportunities which the witnesses had of identifying are material circumstances to be deposed to in each and every case. Man Singh v. Emperor.

Where the accused was identified by three witnesses, of whom two did not mention the accused's name to the Sub-Inspector, and there was no explanation why they did not do so, and the evidence of the other was not of such a nature as to be relied on without corroboration: Held, that there was no sufficient evidence of identification and the accused could not be convicted on such evidence under the circumstances of the case. *Gobind Gope v. EVIDENCE

-----Competency of approver to depose—Assurance given by Government to offender that he will not be prosecuted whether proper—Person assured, whether competent witness—Evidence, value of.

Government may or may not prosecute every offender, and is entitled to give an assurance to a person who has committed an offence that he will not be prosecuted. If such assurance is given to a person before he makes any statement as a witness in a case in which another person who was concerned in the commission of the crime is being tried, the assurance does not affect the competence of the person to whom it is given to make a statement as witness in the case. How far such an assurance affects the credibility of the witness is for the Court trying the case to determine. Anant Wasudeo Chandekar v. Emperor.

26 Cr. L. J. 1467 :
89 I. C. 1035 : 8 N. L. J. 138 :

-----Competency of witnesses.

A witness who is so deaf and dumb that it is impossible to make him understand the questions put in cross-examination, is not a competent witness, and his evidence, if taken, ought to be struck out, and a conviction based solely on his evidence must be quashed. Yan Kattan v. Emperor.

13 Cr. L. J. 271 :
14 I. C. 655 : 1912 M. W. N. 100.

-----Confession made to other person in presence of Police—Admissibility.

An accused's confession to some person, although made in the presence of a Police Officer, is nevertheless admissible in evidence. Where it is satisfactorily proved that immediately after the commission of an offence the accused made a statement incriminating himself, the reasonable inference from such a statement, in the absence of any rebutting evidence, is that the statement is a true representation of the actual facts. Dal v. Emperor.

-----Corroboration—Approver's evidence.

Except under special circumstances, it would be dangerous in this country to convict an accused person on the approver's evidence supported only by a retracted confession of a co-accused who made the confession behind the back of the accused and whom the accused had no opportunity to cross-examine. Such retracted confessions do not constitute corroboration of a high value, although they may be taken into consideration against the co-accused. Debi Dayal v. Emperor.

14 Cr. L. J. 112 :
18 I. C. 672 : 11 A. L. J. 73.

-----Corroboration—Approver's testimony.

It is not sufficient that an approver's testimony is confirmed as to the circumstances of the felony which would only show that the accused was present at the commission of the offence, but the testimony must be corroborated in some material circumstances connecting and identifying the prisoner with the offence. Kattu v. Emperor.

-----Corroboration—Evidence of accomplice.

It is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, but it is highly unsafe to do so unless it is corroborated in material particulars by impartial and reliable evidence. Evidence in corroboration must be dependent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect them with the offence. But it is not necessary that an approver should be corroborated as regards every single statement which he makes. Suresh Chandra Bannerjee v. Emperor.

It is an established principle of law and practice that no accused can be convicted on the bare testimony of an accomplice unless it has been corroborated by independent reliable evidence ———Personal knowledge—Common facts, when may be used.

EVIDENCE

With regard to notorious facts of the social life of any class in the community, it is not necessary for the Court to have actual positive evidence, and Judges are entitled to make use of the knowledge which they, in conjunction with all others, possess of such facts. *Public Prosecutor v. ———Personal knowledge—Use of.

The proceedings under S. 110, Cr. P. C., are judicial and not executive, and a Magistrate is not entitled to base his order in such proceedings on his local and personal knowledge of the accused and witnesses. If it be important to utilize the personal knowledge of a Magistrate, the proper procedure is for the case to be tried by another Magistrate, and the Magistrate with personal knowledge to give evidence as a witness. A Magistrate cannot himself be a witness in a case in which he is the sole judge of law and fact. Nur Din alias Kada v. Emperor.

Ordinarily, where evidence is given by a witness in his own language, the vernacular record of the case is more reliable and entitled to greater weight. But where the Magistrate recording the evidence in English is an Indian gentleman of considerable experience as a Magistrate, his record should be preferred. -----Credibility—Witness not mentioned in Police challan whether ground for disbelieving him.

The evidence of an independent witness cannot be discredited on the sole ground that the Police did not mention him in the challan though he was examined at the spot when he has not been contradicted in any particular by establishing that he made a different statement to the Police or otherwise. *Saraj v. EVIDENCE -----Credibility—Witness not cross-examined—His deposition, whether legal evidence.

The testimony of a witness is not legal evidence unless it is subjected to cross-examination; and where no opportunity has been given to the appellant's Counsel to test the veracity of the principal prosecution witness or where owing to the refractory attitude of the witness, the Court is constrained to terminate all of a sudden and prematurely the cross-examination of the witness, the evidence of such a witness is not legal testimony and cannot be the basis of a judicial pronouncement. *Ram Kumar v. -----Credibility—Witness resiling from statement made in Committing Magistrate's Court—Notice to show cause if can be issued when case is pending—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), S. 288—Effect of.

However exasperating it may be, when a witness resiles from a true statement made in the Committing Magistrate's Court, the Court should not issue notice to show cause while the proceedings are pending. The witness cannot then be considered a free witness; he is giving evidence under fear and duress, and it may not only influence and invalidate his testimony, but it may affect the testimony of witnesses who come later. S. 288, Cr. P. C., enables a Magistrate to bring on the record as substantive evidence, the evidence of a witness who falsely resiles in the Court of Session from his former statement, and the question of the witness's prosecution for perjury can be considered afterwards. *Samero v. 27 Cr. L. J. 775 :
95 I. C. 311.

-----Criminal trial—Identification and circumstantial evidence may establish guilt.

Accused robbed three passengers in the female compartment causing them injuries, one of whom received a grievous hurt, and then jumped out of the train, and was found lying by the railside as he broke his leg

EVIDENCE

———Sufficiency of—Circumstantial evidence.

In order to sustain a conviction on purely circumstantial evidence, such evidence must not be compatible with any hypothesis other than that of the guilt of the accused. The mere fact that the accused had a motive for doing away with the deceased would not make the case any stronger against him where it is shown that there were other persons who had an equal motive to kill the deceased. An attempt to fabricate false evidence of alibi may be a strong piece of evidence against an accused person if his connection with such attempt is established. Majhi v. Emperor.

A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 323.

———Sufficiency—Mere absconding—Whether can be basis of conviction.

Mere absconding of an accused person should not form the basis of a conviction. It comes in as a very useful piece of corroborative evidence if there is other evidence to connect the accused with the crime, but per se absconding is not enough to bring home the charge to the person who has absconded. Jan Khan v. Emperor.

———Sufficiency—that a breach of the peace was, nor is, likely to be committed—Propriety of requiring security on such evidence.

The evidence which goes to show that certain persons at the utmost were likely to cause a breach of the peace at a past annually recurring festival, does not justify the presumption that they are likely to do the same thing at the next recurrence of the festival. And an order to furnish security to keep the peace ought not to be based on such evidence. In the matter of the petition of : Basdeo.

1 Cr. L. J. 360 :
1 L. R. 26 All. 190.

———Sufficiency.

To convict on circumstantial evidence alone, not only must the Court be satisfied that each of the facts on which the presumption of guilt is founded is proved beyond reasonable doubt, but there must be a chain of evidence so far complete as to leave no reasonable ground for a conclusion therefrom consistent with the innocence of the accused. Gurdit Singh v. Emperor.

———Sufficiency—True version not supported by evidence—Conviction on conjecture, legality of.

A conviction based on a conjecture which is not supported by the evidence in the case and which is neither the prosecution nor the defence version, is illegal, even though the view based on the conjecture may probably be the real truth. Ram Surat v. Emperor.

EVIDENCE

———Sufficiency—Unnatural offence—Uncorroborated testimony of complainant, whether sufficient.

In the case of unnatural offence under S. 377, Penal Code, conviction can safely be based on the uncorroborated testimony of the victim, if it is not otherwise doubtful. The prosecution is not bound to produce witnesses who are not expected to speak the truth. Sardar Ahmad v. Emperor. 16 Cr. L. J. 266 :

———Sufficiency.

Where the only evidence against the accused, who were charged with the murder of a little girl, 10 years old was, that the accused were in possession of the jewels of the murdered child and were not able to explain their possession of them, the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction. In re : Batcha Ramudu.

EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

obvious reasons most undesirable that Magistrates and Judges should be in the position of witnesses in so far as it can be avoided. Sometimes it cannot be avoided as under S. 533, but where matter can be made of record and, therefore, admissible as such, there are the strongest reasons of policy for supposing that the legislature designed that it should be made available in that form and no other. It would be particularly unfortunate if Magistrates were asked at all generally to act rather as Police Officers than as judicial persons; to be by reason of their position freed from the disability that attaches to Police Officers under S. 162 of the Code; and to be at the same time freed, notwithstanding their position as Magistrates, from any obligation to make records under S. 164. In the result, they would indeed be relegated to the position of ordinary citizens as witnesses and then would be required to depose to matters transacted by them in their official capacity unregulated by any statutory rules of procedure or conduct whatever. *Nazir Ahmad v. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

—————Corroboration—Accomplice's evidence.

Confirmation of an accomplice's evidence does not mean that there should be independent evidence of that which the accomplice relates or his testimony would be unnecessary. Evidence in corroboration must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms, in some material particular, not only the evidence that the crime has been committed but also that the prisoner committed it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. Kisan Raghuj v. Emperor.

The two appellants were convicted of being in possession of four bundles of cocaine, each bundle containing 8 bottles of $\frac{3}{4}$ th of an ounce each. One of the grounds of appeal was that there was no evidence that the contents of the bottles or packages were an intoxicating drug or cocaine and that the mere labels were not sufficient evidence that the contents were an intoxicating drug for the purpose of a criminal conviction. From the record it appeared that the bottles were never sent to the Chemical Examiner to be analysed. The question was whether, under such circumstances, it might be taken as proved that the bottles contained cocaine. The evidence, which was accepted by the lower and this Court, was that the appellants were found in possession of the bundles, general exception—Facts specially within the knowledge of a person—Pleadings.

Where an accused person has raised pleas inconsistent with a defence, which would bring his case within one of the general exceptions in the Penal Code, he cannot, in appeal, set up a case upon the evidence, taken at his trial, that his act came within such general exceptions. The circumstances which would bring the case of an accused person within any of the general exceptions in Penal Code, can and may be proved from the evidence given for the prosecution or to be found elsewhere in the record. S. 105, Evidence Act, in using the words "shall presume the absence of such circumstance" requires the Court to regard such absence as proved unless and until it is disproved. In the case of most general exceptions, the circumstances which bring the case within a general exception are circumstances within the special knowledge of the accused person and lie within the rule that when any fact is specially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is upon him. Emperor v. Wajid Hussain. 11 Cr. L. J. 374 : 6 I. C. 589 : 7 A. L. J. 438.

A statement, elicited in cross-examination by the defence, to the effect that the accused had been reputed as a thief, cannot be legally admitted in evidence. The law is not that evidence of bad character is inadmissible as against the accused, but that the fact that the accused has a bad character is irrelevant. Under S. 5, Evidence Act, evidence may be given of such facts as are declared to be relevant, and of no others. The cross-examination, as well as the examination-in-chief, must relate to relevant facts. Mi Myin v. Emperor. 9 Cr. L. J. 576 : 2 I. C. 349 : 5 L. B. R. 4.

Shortly after a murder one C went to a person and admitted that he had killed the deceased and was prepared to confess. The latter went to the spot immediately and there heard the by-standers talking that four persons including C had committed the murder : Held, that the transaction in which the murder took place having already come to an end, what the witness heard the by-standers say at the time of his arrival on the spot was not admissible in evidence under S. 6, Evidence Act. *Pakhar Singh v. —S. 6—Admissibility—Statement—Rape case—Mother's statement that girl raped had made certain statements to her, admissibility of—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), S. 375.

Where in a rape case the mother of the girl raped said that the girl had told her after the occurrence that she had been bitten by a leech : Held, that the mother's statement was not substantive evidence of the fact that the girl had been bitten by a leech, though it could possibly be used to corroborate or contradict the statement made by the girl. *Sreehari Swarnakar v. —S. 6—Hearsay evidence—Statement by by-stander.

A statement by a person alleged to be the eye-witness of a murder made to persons who came to the scene of occurrence after the murderers had left the place, cannot be proved against the accused for the purpose of showing that their names were mentioned as murderers. In order to make the statement of a by-stander admissible, it must have been made, as contemplated by S. 6, Evidence Act, and illustration (a) to it, at the time the transaction was taking place, or so shortly before or after it as to form part of the transaction. If the transaction has terminated and then the statement is made, the statement is irrelevant. The admissibility is dependent on continuity. Jowala Sahai v. Emperor. 16 Cr. L. J. 184 : 27 I. —S. 6—Illustration (a)—Hearsay Evidence—Murder—Res gestae—Statement of eye-witnesses shortly after occurrence, if relevant—Admissibility—Same transaction—Interval of time—Physical and mental condition of person making statement.

Hearsay evidence of the statement of a by-stander as to an occurrence would be admissible in evidence as a part of the res gestae only if it was made at the time the transaction was taking place or so shortly before or after it as to form part of the transaction. If the transaction had terminated when the statement was made, it would be irrelevant. In this case a chowkidar deposed that one G. ran up to him and stated that he had seen the accused person murder his mistress whom he had met by assignation and that he had run away from the place of occurrence to save his life. What interval of time passed between the murder and the alleged statement did not appear. G. seemed to be quite sensible when he made the statement and the condition of his mind did not appear to be such as to exclude the supposition of his fabricating evidence or being tutored : Held, that the statement was inadmissible in evidence. *Chain Mahto v. In the course of the examination of the Deputy Magistrate, a question was put to him as to circumstances which led to the examination of the accused on the 6th February. Where the accused gives information which leads to discovery and the exact spot where the ornaments are buried is shown and they are dug out from there, the question is not so much whether the accused was in physical possession of the ornaments, but the important point is rather that the circumstances and the conduct of the accused point clearly to his knowledge of the exact spot where the ornaments were, and in the absence of any explanation, the reasonable inference is that he put them there himself, such conduct is admissible under S. 8, Evidence Act, and this fact taken along with other evidence of his being seen with the deceased is sufficient to warrant a presumption of complicity in murder. *Jamunia v. In order to enable the Court to rely on the evidence of a person who identified the accused in jail, but failed to do so in Court, the fact of the jail identification must be stated in the witness's evidence. An identification in jail is in essence a statement by the witness. "I saw this man who is now before me taking part in the offence." That statement can be used to corroborate his evidence given in Court. If the witness says in his evidence, "a number of persons were shown to me at the jail and from among them I pointed out those persons whom I had seen committing the offence," it is permissible under S. 9, Evidence Act, to call independent evidence, such as that of the Magistrate who conducted the identification, to prove the identity

A much stronger degree of proof is required in criminal proceedings than in civil ones, and in criminal proceedings, the persuasion of guilt must amount to "such a moral certainty as convinces the minds of the Tribunal, as reasonable men beyond all reasonable doubt." It is the business of the prosecution to bring home guilt to the accused to the satisfaction of the minds of the Jury, but the doubt, to the benefit of which the accused is entitled, must be such as rational, thinking, sensible men may fairly and reasonably entertain, not the doubts of a vacillating mind that has not the moral courage to decide, but shelters itself in a vain idle scepticism. *Ah Lok v. It is not desirable that in cases where the evidence of an accomplice is tendered, the Court shall call for proof of the presumption that he is unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars. Experience has shown that in the generality of cases, it is unsafe to convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice alone, although it is not illegal to do so. The Court should, therefore, regard an accomplice as prima facie unworthy of credit, but this presumption which it is open to the Court to draw, is not a hard and fast presumption but one which may be displaced in the circumstances of a particular case. *The King v. dence of the common intention, once reasonable ground has been shown to believe in its existence. But it would be a very different matter to hold that any narrative or statement or confession made to a third party after the common intention or conspiracy was no longer operating and had ceased to exist is admissible against the other party. There is then no common intention of the conspirators to which the statement can have reference. S. 10 embodied this principle. A distinction must be drawn between communications between conspirators while the conspiracy was going on with reference to the carrying out of the conspiracy and statements made, after arrest or after the conspiracy has ended, by way of description of event then past. *Akbar v. ———S. 10—Scope of.

S. 10, Evidence Act, does not apply to incriminating statements made by accused to the Police in the course of the investigation, whether they incriminate themselves or others unless the special provisions of S. 27 let in part of a confession to a Police Officer. A confession by one conspirator made to a Magistrate in Court implicating other conspirators is admissible in evidence under S. 30 but statements made by a conspirator to the Police are not admissible in evidence if they are incriminating. *Pritam Hariomal v. S. 10, Evidence Act, renders admissible in cases of conspiracy much evidence which is not ordinarily admissible. Under the section anything said or written by any conspirator in reference to the common intention of the conspiracy after the time when such intention was first entertained by any conspirator is a relevant fact as against each of the persons believed to be so conspiring as well for the purposes of proving the existence of the conspiracy as for the purpose of showing that any such person was a party to it. *Ram Prasad v. In a prosecution for having conspired to bring false evidence against a person, the fact that the accused had previously instituted unfounded prosecutions against the same person is admissible in evidence under S. 11, Evidence Act. The admissibility under S. 11, Evidence Act, in each case must depend on how near is the connection of the facts sought to be proved with facts in issue, to what degree do they render facts in issue probable or improbable when taken with other facts in the case and to what extent would the admission of the evidence be inconsistent with principles enunciated elsewhere in the Act. *Hlin Gyaw v. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

S. 10, Evidence Act, is intended to make evidence communications between different conspirators while the conspiracy is going on with reference to the carrying out of the conspiracy. It is not intended to make evidence the confession of a co-accused and put it on the same footing as a communication passing between conspirators, or between conspirators and other persons, with reference to the conspiracy. No higher value can be put upon it than upon the statement of an accomplice, and the Court should not be influenced by the statements except where they are corroborated by independent testimony implicating the accused persons in the design with which they are charged. *Emperor v. Although it is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, there is a consensus of opinion that a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is rarely justifiable. Evidence in corroboration must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it, although it is not necessary that there should be confirmation of all the circumstances of the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of accused's connection with the crime. Ram Prasad v. Emperor.

EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

-----S. 10—Proof of abetment by conspiracy.

The accused, a loading officer of a Railway Company, fraudulently endorsed shorter weights on the back of consignment notes, whereby the Railway Company were defrauded and the cognizances were benefited. It was proved that the firm of the consignees was in negotiation with the accused about something and that the firm had, through its dealings with some loading officer of the Railway Company, been able to defraud the company of considerable sums and the name of the accused signed by himself appeared in one of the note-books of the firm and there was positive evidence that it was the duty of the accused to make out the weights on the consignment notes; Held, that under S. 10, Evidence Act, the note-books and jama kharach of the firm could be used as evidence of abetment by conspiracy against the accused. *Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. -----S. 10—Scope.

S. 10, Evidence Act, is quite comprehensive ; this section renders admissible in cases of conspiracy such evidence which is not ordinarily admissible under the English Law, or under the Indian Law. Direct evidence is not essential to prove a conspiracy. From the very nature of cases of this description, it can be seen that it is not possible for the prosecution to produce a written agreement to show that certain persons entered into a conspiracy. The question as to whether or not there was a conspiracy has to be decided in reference to the circumstances which might be proved in the case. No fixed rules can be laid down for proving a conspiracy ; in some cases it may be possible to prove the existence of a conspiracy by producing letters or time writings of the conspirators. In other cases, the existence of a conspiracy may be proved by oral evidence. Then there may be cases in which the fact may be proved by evidence of surrounding circumstances and by the antecedent and subsequent conduct of the accused persons. The existence of the assent of minds which is involved in a conspiracy may be, and from the secrecy of the crime, usually must be, inferred from the proof of facts and circumstances which, taken together, apparently indicate that they are merely part of some complete whole. The first thing for the prosecution in a case of this type is to give satisfactory evidence to show a common purpose.

Where the prosecution produces the approver, and proves a large number of letters which would connect various members of the conspiracy, these letters and the statements of the approver would be admissible under S. 10 against members of the conspiracy. Bhola Nath v. Emperor. 40 Cr. L. J. 856 :

S. 10, Evidence Act, is wider than the English Law and words : "reasonable ground to believe" in the section are not equivalent to proof and where the prosecution have produced prima facie proof of a conspiracy to commit murder and where the accused were one and all members of that conspiracy, anything said, done or written by any one of the conspirators, whether accused or not, in reference to the said common intention, after that intention was first entertained by any of them, is a relevant fact under the said section against each and all of the accused, as well for the purpose of proving the existence of the conspiracy as for the purpose of showing that "any such person" was a party to it. *Balmokand v. -----S. 21—Admission by accused—Application of sections—Non-denial of a fact by accused not to be taken as admission—No pleadings in Criminal cases.

S. 21, Evidence Act, refers to an admission made before the start of proceedings in which it is sought to be given in evidence. It does not refer to pleadings in the case or to an admission contained in such pleadings. An admission made by an accused before the start of proceedings against him may be proved just as much as an admission by the defendant in a civil suit under S. 21, Evidence Act. But as there are no pleadings in a criminal case similar to those in civil proceedings, the mere fact that the accused did not, in his written statement, deny a certain fact (e. g., the publication by him of a libel) does not justify the inference that he admitted that fact. *Jeremiah v. ———Ss. 10, 47—Scope of, S. 10 Statement relating to conspiracy, admissibility of, against persons who are parties to conspiracy—Corroboration, necessity of—Proof of intention.

The terms of S. 10, Evidence Act, are very wide and statements relating to a conspiracy are admissible against persons who are parties to the conspiracy. Existence of conspiracy need not be proved before admitting such statements. The provisions of S. 10 framed for the purpose of preventing purely technical objections, would appear to bar out the objection that the evidence could not be admitted until the conspiracy had been proved, because the section provides that the statements may be used to prove the existence of the conspiracy. With these very wide provision of S. 10, applying to acts done in connection with the conspiracy, an act done by the third person may possibly, in certain circumstances, be actually treated as evidence of the existence of the conspiracy. These mere statements of third parties made in the absence of the person implicated form a class by themselves of no probative value whatever standing alone. The terms of S. 10 do not permit of the attaching of weight as real evidence to mere statements of this kind made in the absence of the accused; and the independent evidence required as corroboration of such a statement must be something very much more than the evidence which may ordinarily be regarded as corroborating the evidence of an accomplice. The evidence must be proof of intention, and not merely proof of a possible motive for the intention. Jagdish Das v. Emperor.

In a prosecution for forgery, a statement made by the accused in a previous civil case that the document is a genuine one, may be proved in evidence on the footing that it is not a confession but an admission. S. 195 (1) (c), Cr. P. C., applies only to forgery when committed or alleged to have been committed by a party to the proceedings before him. If a person falsely puts his name down as an attesting witness to the signature of somebody who he knows, has never signed at all, he is guilty of forgery just as well as the scribe. Where a person who executed a forged document and the attesting witnesses were charged under S. 467, Penal Code, and S. 467 read with S. 109 of the Code and the Judge in the charge to the Jury said that if the Jury had reasons to believe that the accused were conspiring, evidence given by one of the accused would be evidence against the others: Held, that there was no misdirection in spite of the fact that the accused were not charged under S. 120-B. *Ambar Ali v. Where a document is sought to be adduced in evidence to show the intention of the accused, it is not necessary to show that there is a definite connection between the document and the particular writing which is the subject-matter of the charge. The main question in such cases is whether the writing that is sought to be put in as evidence of intention does, in fact, contain matter which supports the contention that such intention is thereby shown. Where the actual writer of a pamphlet is being tried for sedition, a document written by him can be admitted in evidence to show his intention even though it was never printed and published. Primarily anything which he has written is, if it comes within the general words of S. 14, Evidence Act, relevant and admissible, provided it is within a reasonable time of the particular document in respect of which he is being charged. *Emperor v. —S. 14—Relevancy — Evidence as to history of dealings between accused and officers in charge under S. 409, Penal Code.

In a prosecution under S. 409, Penal Code, the evidence as to the history and the dealings between accused and his officers is relevant under S. 14, Evidence Act, for the purpose of showing the accused's state of mind, and it is from this evidence, that the Court has to deduce whether the intention of the accused was dishonest within the meaning of the statute, always remembering that if there is room for reasonable doubt, the accused, is to get the benefit of it. Emperor v. Chaturbhuj Narain Chondhury.

An accused cannot be convicted of an offence with which he is charged, simply because he has been guilty of another offence. Therefore, when such evidence is offered to prove his commission of the offence on trial, evidence of his participation, either in act or design, in commission or preparation, in an independent crime, cannot be received as substantive evidence of the offence on trial. Evidence, however, may be given to prove the elements mentioned in S. 14, Evidence Act, intention and like matters. Baharuddin Mandal v. Emperor.

The inference may be suggested by the confession itself or by the evidence of the prosecution or by the evidence adduced by the accused person or by the surrounding circumstances which the Court is always bound to take into consideration, but the conclusion cannot be reached on surmise or conjecture. The headman of a village is a person in authority within the meaning of S. 24, Evidence Act, but before a confession made to him could be ruled out, it must be found that the making of the confession was caused by an inducement, threat or promise, and further, that such inducement, threat or promise was sufficient to give the accused grounds which would appear to the accused reasonable for supposing that he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil of a temporal nature. Where there was evidence to show that the headman told the accused who had made a confession to him that if she would tell the truth he would speak to the Thanedar to let her off but there was nothing to show that the confession was made on account of this inducement: Held, that the confession was not inadmissible. The question whether a confession made by the accused was made voluntarily or not, is a question to be decided by the Judge and not by the Jury, and it is a serious error of law to leave this question to the Jury. Even assuming that the onus is on the accused, it would be a grave misdirection to tell the Jury that an accused person can never prove that a confession is not voluntary. The expression 'if it appears' used in S. 24, Evidence Act, is not as strong an expression as 'proved' and it is, therefore, open to an accused person to show that the circumstances under which a confession was made, were such as to justify the inference that it was obtained by threat or inducement, even if he is not able to give definite proof of his allegation. *Khuro Mandal v. A retracted confession is sufficient for the conviction of a person making the confession even though certain parts of the confession are not found to be true. A Sessions Judge should not question the Magistrate before whom a confession has been made as to his impressions about the accused's demeanour while he was making the confession and the Magistrate's opinion that the accused was at the time of making the confession suffering from a guilty conscience, is not admissible in evidence. Where it transpired that the accused, with a view to poison a certain person, had given a powder to a girl to be administered to that person and a salish (assembly) consisting of the President of a panchayat and others was summoned to consider the case which was being made against the accused, and on their telling her that if she confessed, the matter would be compromised, she made a confession, and on her trial, the Sessions Judge in his charge to the Jury said: "A confession made under these circumstances is not inadmissible because (1) the members of the salish were not persons in authority; (2) the accused was not then charged with any offence." Held, that the Judge possibly misdirected the Jury, inasmuch as it was clearly erroneous on his part to tell the Jury that the President of a panchayat was not a person in authority within the purview of S. 24, Evidence Act, and that the accused was not then charged with any offence, for she was before the salish on a charge of having attempted to commit murder. *Emperor v. In order to determine whether a certain individual is a "person in authority" within the meaning of S. 24, Evidence Act, the test is whether the person had authority to interfere with the matter, and any concern or interest in it is sufficient to give him that authority. A confession is irrelevant where it has been caused by an inducement proceeding from a person in authority and sufficient to give the accused grounds which would appear to them reasonable for supposing that by making the confession they would gain an advantage of a temporal nature in reference to the proceedings against them. *Devendra Bhattacharya v. The mere fact that the accused thought that the person to whom he was making a confession was a person in authority is not sufficient to render the confession inadmissible in evidence. Though a too restricted meaning should not be given to the expression 'person in authority' in S. 24, the test to be applied is whether the person had authority to interfere in the matter and any concern or interest in it would be sufficient to give him that authority. The prisoner was tried for the murder of a boy who was wearing certain ornaments at the time of his disappearance, but the ornaments were not found on his corpse when it was recovered from a well. At the trial the Sub-Inspector of Police deposed to the fact that in consequence of information received from the prisoner, he had recovered from one Allah Din silver karas which the boy was wearing when he was last seen alive. The witness was then asked to disclose the information communicated to him by the prisoner which caused the discovery of the fact deposed to by him. He stated that the prisoner had, during the investigation, made the following statement: "I had removed the karas; and pushed the boy into the well and had pledged the karas with Allah Din"; Held, by the Full Bench that the statement that the accused had pledged with Allah Din the karas subsequently recovered from the latter was admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act, and that the rest of the incriminating statement could not be received in evidence. The confessional statement that the accused had pushed the boy into the well was wholly inadmissible as it related to a separate matter and had no connection with the possession of ornaments by Allah Din which was the only fact discovered. Nor could the statement that the prisoner had removed the karas from the boy be regarded as the immediate cause of the discovery. Per Shadi Lal, C. J.—The language of S. 27, Evidence Act, shows that the Legislature has prescribed two limitations in order to define the scope of the information provable against the accused: (1) The information must be such as has caused the discovery of the fact. In other words, the fact must be the consequence, and the information the cause of its discovery. The information and the fact should be connected with each other as cause and effect; (2). The information must "relate distinctly" to the fact discovered, that is to say, the information must be clearly connected with the fact. These conditions, when combined, lead to the conclusion that only that portion of the information is provable which is the immediate or proximate cause of the discovery of the fact. Anything, which is not connected with the fact as its cause, or is connected with it, not as its immediate or direct cause but as its remote cause, does not come within the ambit of the section and should be excluded. The admissibility or otherwise of the information must depend upon its intrinsic character and not upon the manner in which the sentence conveying the information is framed by the Police Officer or the prisoner. In determining the extent of the statement which should be provable on the ground of its being the proximate cause of the discovery, the Courts must have regard not to the composition of the sentences in which the statement is couched but to its substance. S. 39, Evidence Act, cannot be invoked for the purpose of letting in a confession in respect of which the bar created by Ss. 24, 25 and 26, Evidence Act, has not been removed by S. 27, Evidence Act. It was never intended that a matter which has been expressly ruled out should be allowed to come in, in the garb of an explanatory statement. It is an established rule of Indian Law that every confession must be rejected which has been improperly obtained or has been made by an accused person to a Police Officer or whilst he is in custody of a Police Officer. If circumstances, however, appear which rebut the presumption of its being false and demonstrate its truth, the confession should be allowed. When, in consequence of information furnished by the accused, a fact is discovered then the discovery of that fact supplies a guarantee of the truth of the information which may amount to a confession and the confession in so far as it is confirmed by the discovery should be deemed to be true. Sukhan v. Emperor.

———Ss. 24, 25, 28—'Person in authority', meaning of—Zamindar, whether is person in authority.

S. 24, Evidence Act, refers not to a person whom the accused may regard as being in authority but to a person who actually is in authority. The main test as to when a person is deemed to be a 'person in authority' within the meaning of the section is, whether he stands in such relations to the accused as imply some power of control or interference in regard to his prosecution. Zemindars quazemindars are not necessarily 'persons in authority.' The question must be decided in each case upon its particular circumstances but whenever zemindars are directly concerned in an investigation by the direction of the Police, then they clearly are 'persons in authority' within the meaning S. 24, Evidence Act. Co-villagers of an accused person cannot be regarded as 'persons in authority' from the matters and no villager, however ignorant, would ascribe any such power to persons of this kind. A confession alleged to have been made to the zemindars is not irrelevant under S. 24, Evidence Act, when there is nothing to suggest that any inducement or promise was offered or made because the persons to whom the confession was made could not possibly be described as persons in authority within the meaning of the section. *Jivan v. When a man of sound mind and full age makes a confessional statement in ordinary simple language after he has been warned, he must be bound by the language of the statement and by its ordinary plain meaning. Admissions of guilt made by an accused in full possession of his faculties in his confession to a Magistrate do not, where the accused is utterly unable to show how he made the admissions if they were not true, become ineffective, because they are subsequently retracted. The retracted confession alone of an accused is not sufficient to justify the conviction of a co-accused, but where such confession stands un rebutted, and there is nothing to show that the accused had any reason for naming other men falsely, and his story fits in exactly with the facts known or proved and is corroborated sufficiently by material evidence against the co-accused, the confession is admissible, and may be a strong piece of evidence against the co-accused. *Hazari v. S. 24—Scope of.

S. 24, Evidence Act, would apply even if the person who is said to have made the confession was not an accused person at the time that he made the confession. It is sufficient if the person ultimately comes to be an accused person with reference to the charge in respect of which he is said to have made the confession. Though the statements made by an approver may be given in evidence against him under Sub-section (2) of S. 339, Cr. P. C., it cannot be said that the operation of S. 24, Evidence Act, is altogether excluded. Ordinarily, the inducement that would appear on the surface would be the inducement of the pardon legally tendered and accepted under the provisions of Cr. P. C. But if it is shown in any case that there was some other influence simultaneously proceeding from any other authority which would invite the application of S. 24, then the confessional part of the statement would become inadmissible by virtue of the provisions of that section. A statement falling within clause (2) of S. 339, Cr. P. C., is removed from the operation of S. 24. Emperor vi Cunna. 22 Cr. L. J. 68 : 59 I. C. 324 : 22 Bom. L. R. 1247.

S. 24—Statement in police custody.

A statement by an accused person, while he is in the custody of the Police, that the weapon with which the crime was committed is concealed in a particular place is admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act, but where it appears that at the time of making the statement the accused was under the influence of the promise of a person in authority to save him from punishment, the statement must be excluded under S. 24, Evidence Act. In re : Semalai Goundan. 26 Cr. S. 24—Statements made by accused are confessions within meaning of S. 24.

The statements made by the accused were 'confessions' within the meaning of S. 24, Evidence Act. That the statements were made to a person in authority, as Captain Phillips, who represented the Army Clothing Department, spoke to the accused as one in authority and was the potential prosecutor in the case, and that the statements were made by an accused person, though not formally arrested, and that the statements were, therefore, inadmissible. To constitute a 'confession' under the Evidence Act, it is not necessary that the person confessing should make a full and explicit admission of his guilt, so clear as to leave no other hypothesis tenable. Smith v. Emperor.

An incriminating statement made by an accused person to a Police Officer cannot be proved against the accused even where such statement is on the face of it exculpatory. The medium by which it is sought to prove such a statement does not alter the matter. The question is "to whom was the statement made?" If the statement was made to a Police Officer, it is inadmissible in evidence, and the mere fact that the accused subsequently says before a Magistrate, "I told the Police Officer so and so" (giving the conversation that took place), without also adding, "and that is true," it does not render the statement admissible. *Emperor v. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872) ———Ss. 24, 25—Confession in Police custody—Magistrate on leave and outside jurisdiction—Accused ignorant of Magistrate's evidence—Value of evidence.

Evidence is inadmissible to prove a confession made while an accused person is in Police custody, except in so far as any fact is discovered in consequence of the information so received from him. Very little value can be attached to such a confession when the fact that a Magistrate was present at the time the confession was made was not known to the accused, who was under the impression that he made the statement in the presence only of the Police and their friends. *Faiz Ullah v. ———Ss. 24, 25—Confession to Police—Confession made under pressure of Police, admissibility of.

Where the pressure exercised by a Police Officer on an accused person is sufficient to furnish the latter with grounds which would appear to him reasonable for supposing that by making a confession he would gain an advantage or avoid an evil of a temporal nature, the confession would not only be weak in value, but would be wholly inadmissible under S. 24, Evidence Act. A confession made to the Police is totally inadmissible in evidence and cannot be referred to in order to explain away a discrepancy in a confession subsequently made to the Magistrate. Dip Singh Emperor.

It was not the intention of the Legislature to allow the Police by an ingenious perversion of the provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act, to get rid of the safe-guards thrown round prisoners by Ss. 24, 25 and 26 of the Act and the exception to the general rule must be very strictly confined within its legitimate limits. *Tara Singh v. A confession, leading to discovery of articles is, however, admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act. Such a confession may be used for the purpose of arriving at a conclusion whether a subsequent judicial confession should be believed or not. As S. 25, Evidence Act, refers only to a Police Officer, a Court should not extend it to other classes of officers merely on grounds of similarity of function especially in view of the fact that the Evidence Act was introduced at a time when the methods of the Police were much more open to attack than they are now. The restrictive provisions of S. 25 should not, therefore, be applied to Excise Officers. A confession made by an accused to an Excise Officer is, therefore, admissible in evidence

There is nothing in law to prevent a Court from convicting a person upon a confession which has been subsequently retracted provided that the Court is convinced that the statement is voluntary and true. Where the confession is made by a person who is sui juris before a Magistrate, in an atmosphere untainted by the influence of the Police or by any other influence and there are no suspicious features about it, there is no reason why the statement should not be accepted. Where two such confessions are made by two different persons and both of them are self-incriminatory and each of them affects the other co-accused, this is an important circumstance which may be and ought to be taken into consideration at the trial. *Khuban v. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

An accused person confessed that he had sold a part of his share in a dacoity to a particular person and some of the stolen articles were recovered in pursuance of this information. In the trial it was contended that the description of the property as the accused's share of the dacoity was not such an information as led to the recovery of the property and was not admissible in evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act: Held, that the confession so far as it related to description of the property was also admissible in Evidence. In every case of this nature the Court has to consider how much of the information given by the accused does relate distinctly to the fact discovered. The Evidence Act, in express terms, puts the law on the subject on a much wider basis than does the Common Law in England. Harnam Singh v. Emperor.

—S. 27—‘Confession’, meaning of.

The word ‘confession’ in S. 27, does not necessarily mean a complete confession of guilt but obviously means and includes any incriminating statement. The question as to whether a statement is or is not incriminating, depends both on that statement itself as well as on other facts proved aliunde. Karam Din v. Emperor.

—S. 27—Confession to Police—Retracted confession, value of—Discovery consequent upon confession—Statement, how far admissible.

It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by an accused cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence. But the credibility of a confession is in each case a matter to be decided by the Court in the light of the circumstances in which the confession was originally made and in which it was afterwards withdrawn. So much of a confession made to the Police as directly leads to the recovery of certain articles is admissible in evidence but a further statement with regard to them, for instance, that they were stolen property, is no part of the information directly leading to their discovery and is inadmissible under S. 27, Evidence Act. *Manna Lal v. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

—S. 27—Custody, meaning of.

‘Police custody’ does not necessarily mean custody after formal arrest and it also includes ‘some form of Police surveillance and restriction on the movements of the person concerned by the Police’. It is open to an accused person to prove in every case that arises that he was actually in the custody of a Police Officer, although in the Police diaries he was not shown to have been formally arrested. *Hakam Khuda Yar v. —S. 27—Custody—Whether there should be formal arrest—Mere suspect not charged nor arrested—Presence of such person with Police—Whether amounts to custody—Statement under such circumstances leading to discovery—Admissibility.

In order that a statement under S. 27, Evidence Act, be admissible, the maker of the statement should be in the custody of the Police, that custody need not be a formal arrest. In the case of mere suspects who have not been formally charged with any offence or arrested under any section of the Cr. P. C., their presence with the Police under some restraint amounts to ‘custody’ which is contemplated by S. 27, Evidence Act. If a statement made by a person in the above circumstances leads to the discovery of any matter, it is admissible in evidence under S. 27. Allah Ditta v. Emperor.

The word ‘discovered’ is used in S. 27 in a peculiar sense and the test is that the fact discovered must be discovered in the sense, that the proof of the existence of that fact no longer rests on the credibility of the accused's statement but rests on the credibility of the witnesses who depose to the existence of that fact. *Karam Din v. ———S. 26—Confession in custody—Arrest illegal—Confession, admissibility.

The policy of the Legislature appears to be that any statement in the nature of a confession made by an accused while under the custody and control of a Police Officer should be excluded from evidence. This is no doubt a wholesome policy and this policy would be defeated if the section is not to apply when the arrest by the Police Officer has been illegal. Whether the arrest is legal or illegal, the mischief which S. 26 is intended to avert remains all the same. Emperor v. Jagia.

But where the accused is not arrested or not under supervision, and is merely being invited to explain certain circumstances, it would be going further than the section warrants to exclude the statement that he makes, on the ground that he is to be deemed in Police custody. The weight however, to be given to it depends very much on the

It is a cardinal rule of interpretation that a general Statute is to be construed as not repealing a particular one. A repeal by implication is only effected when the provisions of a later enactment are so inconsistent with or repugnant to the provisions of an earlier one, that the two cannot stand together. The Evidence Act is a separate Statute dealing with an important branch of law and its provisions are independent of the rules of procedure contained in the Cr. P. C., and must have full scope unless it is clearly proved that they have been repealed or altered by another Statute. S. 162, Cr. P. C., applies to the statements of persons examined as witnesses by the Police in the course of investigation and not to the statement of an accused person and does not override or modify the provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act. *Rannun v. If two persons give information which leads to the discovery of a fact, so much of the statement of each which relates to the fact discovered is thereby confirmed and is admissible against both. Statements of co-accused subsequent to the discovery are irrelevant. After having made discovery from one accused the other should not be invited to point out the same place. Where a Police Sub-Inspector, the investigating officer in a murder case, was inter alia, informed by the accused of the fact that the latter had committed the murder, and the Sub-Inspector was allowed to depose to regarding this information: Held, that such information not being admissible in evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act, the Sub-Inspector should not have been allowed to state in Court that the accused said that he had committed the murder. The provisions of S. 342, Cr. P. C., apply to all sorts of proceedings in Magistrates' Courts, whether the case is one triable by a Court of Session or otherwise. Under S. 342 a Magistrate is empowered at any time and without any previous warning to put questions to the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him, and under Sub-s. (3) of the same section, the answers which the accused gives to questions so put may be used in evidence against him. The admissibility of the accused's statement thus made is not necessarily governed by those sections of the Evidence Act which relate to the admission of confessions, as the statement is not made extra-judicially. But under S. 342, a Magistrate is not justified in putting to the accused questions of an inquisitorial nature. Malik Husain v. Emperor.

A statement made by a person accused of murder, while in the custody of the Police, that he has burned the clothes of the deceased and would show the Police where he had done so, though not a confession of complete guilt so far as the charge for murder is concerned, is a direct admission of constructive guilt inasmuch as the burning of the clothes primarily implies that the accused had taken part in the murder and was evidence for a conviction under S. 201, Penal Code. —S. 27—Scope of.

If the recoveries were made in consequence of the information supplied by the accused, the statements made by them are admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act. Ali Ahmad v. Emperor.

A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 434.

—S. 27—Scope of—Provisions of, if contradictory—S. 162, if alters S. 27, Evidence Act—Statement of accused to Police that he would point out ornaments of deceased, admissibility.

The provisions of S. 27, Evidence Act, are quite independent of S. 162, Cr. P. C., and the amendment of that section made in 1923 was not intended to abrogate or impair the effect of S. 27, Evidence Act. The statement made by the accused that he would produce deceased's ornaments which distinctly led to the discovery of the ornaments, falls within the ambit of S. 27. S. 27 contemplates the discovery of material evidence. The material discovered would have no value unless it is relevant to the fact in issue and connected in some manner with the crime under investigation. Any information given by an accused person 'showing the relevancy of a fact to the crime, must form an integral part of the discovery of the fact itself, namely material evidence, although it may indirectly amount to a confession. Consequently, the statement made by the accused that he would point out the deceased's ornaments would be admissible. That would only show his knowledge of the ornaments belonging to the deceased but would not prove by itself his complicity in the crime of murder. Moti Lal v. Emperor.

—S. 27—Scope of.

S. 27, Evidence Act, must be construed, in any particular case, as favourably to the accused as possible, for it is a section which makes an exception against the accused contrary to the general sections, namely, Ss. 25 and 26, Evidence Act, which are in his favour. The fact that information was derived from the accused can be proved even if the exact words used by the accused are not known. Where an accused person stated: "I buried the shirt, which was my share of the stolen property, under the beri tree: Held, that inasmuch the fact that the shirt was the accused's share of the stolen property could not be said to be a fact 'discovered', the expression 'which was my share of the stolen property' was not admissible in evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act, though the rest of the statement was admissible. *Karam Din v. The Thanedar made this promise to her. She together with the Police and a number of villagers went to a spot and produced from a dung heap the ornaments worn by the deceased : Held, that the fact of the discovery was admissible in evidence. In weighing evidence of this kind obtained under an inducement, consideration must always be given to the fact that the evidence was in all probability secured by the promise held out. There may be cases where the circumstances are such that the fact that the discovery was induced by a promise would raise a doubt as to the genuineness of the discovery and render the evidence almost worthless. *Emperor v. Then he was formally arrested and sent to a Magistrate who took down his confession and to whom the accused candidly expressed his hope that by confessing he might secure a pardon and the Magistrate acquiesced in the idea and even confirmed it : Held, that the confession was inadmissible as it was quite impossible to hold that it did not appear to have been caused by some inducement from some person in authority. *Shree Hmon v. ———S. 27—Record of Police, regarding searches, etc.—Admissibility of.

S. 162, Cr. P. C., is aimed against the admission, at the instance of the prosecution, of Police diaries and other records prepared or copied from the diaries of the Investigating Officers. It is not intended to exclude from evidence records of searches or a record of a statement made by the accused pointing out the place where a weapon is concealed. The section does not, in any way, supersede the provisions of S. 27 of Evidence Act. The provisions of the Evidence Act are quite independent of the sections in the Cr. P. C. and cannot be treated as impliedly repealed in consequence of the amendment of Cr. P. C. In re : Semalai Goundan.

The intention of the Legislature in enacting S. 27, Evidence Act, was that the minimum portion of a confession made to a Police Officer or of information given to him should be admitted into evidence which might reasonably be held to relate distinctly and positively to the fact discovered and which is necessary to be proved in order adequately to explain such discovery. Consequently, the statement of the accused made while in Police custody, that he had himself buried a gun at a certain place, leading to the discovery of that gun in that place, is admissible in evidence. *Emperor v. The admissibility of evidence to the effect that the accused went to a certain place and there produced certain ornaments should be judged by the provisions of the Evidence Act and not by the provisions of S. 135, Cr. P. C. S. 27, Evidence Act, does not qualify only S. 26 but it also qualifies Ss. 24 and 25 of the Act. The object of S. 27 is to provide for the admission of evidence which but for that section cannot be admitted by virtue of the three preceding sections. That section does not profess to and does not deal with evidence as to the conduct or acts of the accused which is admissible under S. 8 or any of the preceding sections of the Evidence Act. *Misri v. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872) ———Ss. 27, 30—Confession of accused—Testimony of accomplice—Distinction—Conviction based solely on confession of co-accused, legality of.

The confession of a co-accused under the provisions of S. 30, Evidence Act, stands on a different footing from the testimony of an accomplice. The latter is substantive evidence in the strict sense of the term, a conviction may legally proceed upon it without corroboration. But the confession of a co-accused is not, in itself, substantive evidence and cannot be used as the basis of a conviction. It may be used only in a subsidiary manner in connection with the substantive evidence adduced in the case to which recourse must be had in the first instance. The conviction based solely on the confession of a co-accused is bad in law. Neeha v. Emperor. 29 Cr. L. J. 609 : 109 I. C. 801 : 11 N. L. J. 104 : A. I. R. 1929 Nag. 213.

—S. 27—Scope of—Statements made by accomplice elsewhere than before the Court, admissibility of.

S. 27, Evidence Act, is a proviso to the preceding sections which deal with what may or may not be proved as against the person making a confession. It has nothing whatever to do with what may or may not be proved as against other persons when the person who made the alleged confession is not himself on his trial but is appearing as a witness in the case. Hearsay evidence of any statement whatsoever made at any time and under any circumstances by an accomplice cannot be produced as against the accused before the Court. Statements made by an accomplice elsewhere than before the Court and not in the presence of the accused can be proved only to corroborate, to contradict or to impeach the credit of the accomplice. In no case can they be put forward as substantive evidence of the truth of the facts therein stated. Aman Ali v. Emperor.

11 Cr. L. J. 631 :
8 I. C. 379 : 13 O. C. 309.

—S. 27—Scope of.

The greatest possible precision should also be insisted on in a statement concerning information given by an accused person which is alleged to have led to the discovery of a certain fact, and which is, therefore, admissible in evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act. The discovery of a fact in consequence of information given by an accused person to the Police does not render a subsequent confession to a Police Officer admissible in evidence, nor does S. 27, Evidence Act, apply to information given to the Police by an accused person who was not in custody at the time it was given. Kha Hlaw v. Emperor.

7 Cr. L. J. 82 :

—S. 27—Scope of.

There is no irregularity in the recording of a witness's statement under S. 164, Cr. P. C., without calling the accused, but an accused's statement to the Police corresponding to that statement is ordinarily inadmissible as being a very incriminating circumstance equivalent to a confession, and S. 27, Evidence Act, cannot come into operation where there is not the required guarantee of the truth of his statement in the discovery of the identical property. In re : Maretha Balu Dolatram. 7 Cr. L. J. 166.

—S. 27—Scope of.

Under Ss. 27 and 30, Evidence Act, the most that could be taken into consideration in the statement of an accused against another would be so much of the information amounting to a confession as was the immediate cause of the discovery of some relevant fact against the person making the statement. In re : Sankappa Rai.

7 Cr. L. J. 325 :
18 M. L. J. 66 : 31 Mad. 127 :

—S. 27—Scope of—Whether in nature of proviso to previous sections.

S. 27, Evidence Act, is in the nature of a proviso relating to the previous sections which lay down the general rules as to the inadmissibility of confessions made in certain circumstances. The general ground for not admitting confessions made either to a Police Officer, or made under any inducement, or made by persons while in custody, is clearly the danger of admitting false confessions, but the necessity for this precaution disappears when the truth of the confession is guaranteed by the discovery of facts in consequence of the information given. The statement, therefore, that the accused had deposited two karas belonging to the deceased in a certain place and offered to show the Police the spot, is admissible. Nahru v. Emperor.

—S. 27—Scope of—Whole of the statement leading to discovery, if admissible.

S. 27, Evidence Act, is an enabling section providing an exception to the previous ones, which exclude confessions made to or in presence of the Police. If the conditions of the section are fulfilled, it allows even a confession to be proved. If an accused makes a statement which is admissible under S. 27, the whole of the statement which leads to the discovery of the stolen property, is admissible and sentences should not be cut up so as to reduce the statements only to the actual words which the accused may use to express the fact

EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

————S. 30—Confession—Co-accused—Legal evidence—Abetment—Revision—Practice.

Where some of the accused persons make statements in Court denying their participation in the commission of any crime, but inculpating a co-accused, these statements are not confessions and cannot be taken into consideration as against the co-accused under S. 30, Evidence Act. A statement made to the Police by an accused person to the effect that if certain other persons were sent for, he would see that some other property was traced out and restored, is not legal evidence to prove that the accused has been guilty of abetment of theft. Where the record disclosed no legal evidence in support of a conviction, the conviction was set aside on revision. Bishan Datt v. Emperor.

EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

————S. 30—Confession and admission—Distinction between.

The Indian Evidence Act makes a clear distinction between an 'admission' and a 'confession'. It is only under S. 30 that the confession of two or more persons, jointly tried for the same offence, can be taken into consideration as against the rest. It must be a confession to be so admissible, that is, it must affect both the person confessing and other accused. The word 'confession' must not be construed as including a mere inculpatory admission which falls short of being an admission of guilt. Santa Bandu v. Emperor.

————S. 30—Confession by one accused against others.

The confession was made for the first time at the preliminary enquiry, but it was made in the dock in the presence of another accused and there was no question of its having to be proved at that stage. Then at the Sessions trial, two months later, it was proved under S. 287, Cr. P. C., by the Magistrate's verbatim record of it: Held, that the confession could be taken into consideration against the other accused jointly tried. The other accused was in no way prejudiced since he had as much opportunity of explaining or rebutting it as if it had been made before the preliminary enquiry and proved at that enquiry. In re: Velu Naicken.

————S. 30—Confession by accused, use of.

Under S. 30, Evidence Act, the Court may take into consideration a confession by an accused as against a co-accused, but a Court can only treat such a confession as lending assurance to other evidence against a co-accused, and cannot base a conviction on the confession of a co-accused alone. Where there are two sets of evidence neither of which alone can be accepted without corroboration, they cannot each in its turn, be taken to corroborate the other and join together so as to justify any Court in acting on such evidence. A person cannot be convicted of an offence merely because he had absconded, and when arrested, gave a false account of his movements. Devendra Bhattacharya v. Emperor.

Statements made by an accused person which contain information provable in evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act, should be clearly and carefully recorded by the Police Officer, and they should be recorded in the first person, that is to say, in the words used by the accused. They should not be paraphrased. Obviously if what a man says is to be used in evidence, his exact words should be used and not what a Policeman or any one else says he said. When the Police have recorded the statement, it will, in each case, be for the trial Court to decide how much of the statement is admissible under S. 27, that is to say, how much of such information as relates distinctly to the fact discoverable may be proved. *Public Prosecutor v. The statement of an accused that he buried the weapon of the offence in a certain place is relevant but not the part of that statement that it was the weapon with which he had committed the crime. So also the statement that he would point out a certain spot and the evidence that at the spot indicated blood stains would be found, would be admissible, but not the part of that statement that it was at this spot that he had committed the crime. Where the accused produces the article himself, though the fact that he actually produced it at a particular place may be proved, yet the accompanying statement to the effect that he buried it there is inadmissible in evidence. Where an accused person has throughout consistently refused to make any confession before a Magistrate and against whom there is practically no evidence at all, his incriminating statement under S. 27 must necessarily be received with the greatest caution and suspicion, although deposed to by respectable Police Officers and the village authorities. The Police diaries, etc., should be referred to under S. 162, Cr. P. C., in the interest of the accused person for checking the evidence of the prosecution witnesses to see how far their statements can be relied upon. Blood stains on a zemindar's clothes are very seldom incriminating. Santa Singh v. Emperor.

Statements which inculcate the maker more than, or equally with, others alone can afford any satisfactory guarantee of their truth. Less weight must be attached to statements which implicate the maker in a lesser degree than others. Where the principal blame is laid on others, the statement is self-serving according to the ideas of the person making it and is entirely excluded from consideration. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872) ———Ss. 27, 114, 133—Accomplice, testimony of—Corroboration—Circumstantial evidence.

The rule of law enacted in S. 133, Evidence Act, must be subjected to the test deduced from the accumulated experience of human conduct in relation to the testimony of an accomplice. The guiding rule in this behalf is furnished by illustration (b) of S. 114 of that Act which lays down "that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars." An accomplice is too immoral a person to be worthy of credit without corroboration in material particulars, and if corroboration is not forthcoming, because it is not possible in the nature of things that it should be forthcoming, it does not make the accomplice less immoral or his uncorroborated testimony less unworthy of credit. It would be wholly unsafe to treat a piece of circumstantial evidence which is widely disassociated, from the corpus delicti as a material particular to be of any corroborative value to the testimony of an accomplice. In cases dependent on circumstantial evidence in order to justify the inference of guilt, the incriminating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. The favourable impressions on the Judge's mind as to the demeanour of an accomplice in Court cannot take the place of corroboration in material particulars to make the testimony of the accomplice worthy of credit. Manna Lal v. Emperor.

Three accused were charged with murder. After their arrest, third accused made a statement, at the conclusion of which, he promised the Police to take them to the place where the first accused had buried the spear with which he had stabbed the victim. The next day, third accused accordingly took the Police to a gedda and after he had himself unsuccessfully searched for the spear, the first accused took it out and produced it. This statement was admitted under S. 27, Evidence Act, and accused No. 3 was convicted on this statement alone. According to prosecution case, the first accused had himself hidden the spear in that particular spot: Held, that no doubt if one of the Police Officers themselves or any third party acting on the information of the third accused had recovered this spear, S. 27 would have been applicable. But, as this spear was recovered not because of any information given by the appellant, though that might have been the proximate cause of the presence of the party at the gedda but by the action of the first accused himself, the statement by third accused did not fall within S. 27 but within S. 26 and was inadmissible in evidence. The accused could not, therefore, be convicted. In re : Nandivada Ganganna Dhora.

The view, that though as a matter of law a confession of a co-accused is sufficient for the conviction of an accused, as a rule of prudence, one must seek corroboration of the confession before conviction, places the confessions of a co-accused on the same footing as the evidence of an accomplice, but it is not so. The evidence of an accomplice is, as a matter of law, sufficient for a conviction. He is a competent witness and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. If in spite of warning a Jury believes him without corroboration, the High Court cannot interfere. The confession of an accused can only be considered against his co-accused. Even this would not have been permissible but for S. 30, Evidence Act. The Act itself gives it a position inferior to the evidence of an approver. Emperor v. Sadasibo Majhi.

EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

—S. 30—Confession by co-accused at trial—Whether admissible in evidence—Conviction on uncorroborated confession of co-accused, legality of.

Where there is nothing against an accused person but the uncorroborated confession by a co-accused from the dock at the trial, a conviction thereon cannot be supported. The confessional statements of a co-accused at the trial itself are not admissible in evidence at all. In re: Govinda Naidu.

An inquiry was commenced under S. 476, Cr. P. C., with a view to ascertain whether a complaint should be lodged against an accused person with regard to a document produced by him in the course of certain judicial proceedings. In the course of the inquiry the accused made a confession implicating himself and certain other persons in the commission of the offence. As a result of the confession, the accused and the persons named by him were placed on their trial for forgery and cognate offences: Held, that the confession made by the accused in the course of the inquiry under S. 476, Cr. There is nothing in S. 30, Evidence Act, which restricts the confession to one recorded before a Magistrate. On the other hand, Illus. A to S. 30 suggests that the section contemplates "the taking into consideration" of a confession to an ordinary witness. It follows, therefore, that all such confessions when the accused are being tried jointly for the same offence when made by one of them affecting himself and another or others of the accused, may be taken into consideration as against the other or others under S. 30, Evidence Act. *Alhappa Goundan v. An accused person can lawfully be convicted on his own confession, even if the confession has been retracted, if the Court is satisfied of its truth. The confession of an accused person, whether retracted or not, can be taken into consideration as against his co-accused. But an accused person cannot be convicted solely on the confession or confessions of his co-accused unsupported by other evidence. Such confessions may be taken into consideration as lending support to the other evidence in the case. But if there is no evidence, it is not proper basis for a conviction. It is not strengthened by the fact that it is supported by other confessions whether these have been made in such circumstances as to preclude the theory that there has been connivance between the persons making the confessions or not. *Nga Po Kank v. ———S. 30—Confession of co-accused, value of—Corroboration—Intention—Evidence of previous and subsequent transactions, admissibility of.

A confession of a co-accused is not made on oath and its evidentiary value is very low. The statement of even an accomplice has a higher and more probative value than the confession of a co-accused. The Court can only treat a confession of a co-accused under S. 30, Evidence Act, as lending assurance to the other evidence against the co-accused, and a conviction based on the confession of a co-accused alone would be bad in law. *Pane M. The confession of a co-accused cannot be the main evidence in a case. It is the weakest possible kind of evidence, which can only be taken into consideration against the co-accused by reason of the provisions of S. 30, Evidence Act. It is not given upon oath and it is not tested by cross-examination. A statement in such a confession cannot alone be held sufficient to justify a finding of guilty of so grave an offence as that under S. 306, which is punishable with death. Ah Phut v. The King.

The confession referred to in S. 30, Evidence Act, cannot be restricted to an unrettracted confession, as once a confession is proved, it may be taken into consideration. There is nothing in the section to prevent a Court from convicting after taking the confession into consideration, or to fetter the discretion of the Court, but the High Courts in India have laid down rules of practice which deserve all the reverence of law, and ought to be observed by Judges when exercising their discretion under S. 30. A conviction founded solely on the confession of co-accused cannot be sustained. The confession of a co-accused stands on quite a different footing to the testimony of an accomplice. Gangapa Kardepa v. Emperor.

If there is any other relevant matter implicating the co-accused, the Judge is permitted by S. 30, Evidence Act, to consider the confession along with the matter, and as a result of such consideration, to convict the co-accused. Such a confession may, however, be legitimately used to corroborate other evidence and even to supplement the same in those exceptional cases in which without such an aid the other evidence falls short by a very narrow margin of that standard of proof which is requisite for a conviction. It is not possible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to the extent

Where in a Sessions trial the Judge fails to point out to the Jury the considerations applying to the weight to be attached to a retracted confession and places the confession before the Jury as the testimony of an accomplice under S. 133, Evidence Act, the charge amounts to a misdirection, and the verdict passed on such a misdirection, cannot stand. *Moyez Sardar v. Persons under trial for a major offence are also being charged with and tried for any minor offence or offences constituted by the particular ingredients of the major offence which may be proved, and it makes no difference that the conviction of one accused of a minor offence, after trial for a major offence takes place only in appeal, when the course of the proceedings has been the same against them both. In re : Manika Padayachi.

The natural meaning of the words used in S. 32 (1), Evidence Act, does not convey any limitations. The statement may be made before the cause of death has arisen, or before the deceased has any reason to anticipate being killed. The circumstances must be circumstances of the transaction. Circumstances must have some proximate relation to the actual occurrence; though, as for instance, in a case of prolonged poisoning, they may be related to dates at a considerable distance from the date of the actual fatal dose; "the circumstances" are of the transaction which resulted in the death of the declarant. It is not necessary that there should be a known transaction other than that the death of the declarant has ultimately been caused, for the condition of the admissibility of the evidence is that "the cause of [the declarant's] death comes

Where therefore in a murder case, the body of the deceased was found in a trunk proved to be bought on behalf of the accused, the statement made by the deceased to his wife a day or two previous to the date of murder that he was setting out to the place where the accused lived and to meet a person, the wife of the accused, who lived in the accused's house, is clearly a statement as to some of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death and is, therefore, admissible. *Pakala Narayana Swami v. ———S. 32—Dying declaration—Whether can be accepted in part—Statement made by deceased in answer to questions, value of.

A dying declaration stands upon a widely different footing from the testimony of a witness given in Court. In the case of the latter, it is permissible and at times, necessary under certain circumstances, to accept a part which is unimpeachable and reject that which is obviously untrue, though to found a criminal conviction on such appraisalment of evidence is very often very unsafe. In the case of a dying declaration, which by the law of this country, assumes a character very widely different from what it is under the English Law, which is relevant under the provisions of the Evidence Act, where it is not couched in the very words of the person making it but is composed of a mixture of questions and answers, there are several objections open to its reception in evidence which it is desirable should not be open in cases in which the person has no opportunity of cross-examination. In such circumstances, the form of the declaration should be such that it would be possible to see what was the question and what was the answer so as to discover how much was suggested by the Examining Magistrate and how much was the production of the person making the statement. Emperor v. Premananda Dutt.

———S. 33—Previous deposition by witnesses, admissibility of—Proof of requisites—Reasons—Duty of Court.

The power given by S. 33, Evidence Act, requires to be exercised with great caution and the Court must insist on strict proof before holding that the requisite conditions have been satisfied. It is essential that a Judge or Magistrate admitting previous depositions of a witness should, either in his judgment or, preferably in a separate order, record his reasons for doing so. S. 33 pre-supposes a consideration of the grounds for the admission of the deposition prior to the admission of the evidence, and if the grounds and reasons are recorded prior to the admission of the deposition as evidence, the order constitutes a more convincing proof of the considered adequacy of the grounds than a passage in a judgment subsequently written which, in a case near the border line, might easily assume the appearance of a subsequent statement of excuses for a previous ill-considered action. *Nga Nyo v. A previous deposition of a living person can be admitted in evidence only under the provisions of S. 33, Evidence Act, and before it can be placed on the record of a criminal trial, the Court must decide judicially that a proper effort had been made on behalf of the prosecution to secure the presence of the witness, that in spite of that effort he had not been traced and could not be found out. Where none of these requirements is complied with, the statement is inadmissible in evidence and the fact that the Counsel for the accused gave his consent does not make any difference. Ghulam Haider v. Emperor.

EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

———S. 33—Procedure.

A Sessions Judge cannot transfer to the record the deposition given by a prosecution witness before the Committing Magistrate, on the mere statement of the Public Prosecutor that the witness could not be found. He can do so only if, after taking evidence, he comes to a judicial decision in compliance with the requirements of S. 33. Indar v. Emperor.

A Sessions Judge finding that the witnesses who had been summoned to give evidence for the prosecution did not appear upon the date fixed, adjourned the case for eighteen days and ordered fresh summonses to be issued. On the adjourned date, the witnesses were again absent. Thereupon the Sessions Judge made use of the evidence which those witnesses had given before the Committing Magistrate, purporting to do so under S. 33, Evidence Act : Held, that the evidence could not be so used, but the Sessions Judge ought to have directed warrants to issue to enforce the attendance of the prosecution witnesses and compelled their attendance in Court. *Emperor v. Admissibility in evidence at trial for murder.

Gestures of the deceased shortly before his death in reply to questions put to him as explained by the questions will be relevant as conduct under S. 8, Evidence Act, although it is doubtful whether his gestures in reply to the questions put to him or the questions put to him taken together with his gestures in reply to them, could without straining of language be regarded as a verbal statement made by him within the meaning of S. 32. The form of the question cannot affect the admissibility of the signs, if such signs are rendered admissible under the Evidence Act. of person to whom declaration was made before a statement in part, legality of.

A dying declaration was recorded by a Sub-Inspector of Police in the course of an investigation. The Sub-Inspector was examined in the Committing Court to prove this, but he died before the Sessions trial. The prosecution sought to put in the deposition of the Sub-Inspector under S. 33, Evidence Act. The Sessions Judge held that it could not be admitted in evidence on the ground that no specific opportunity had been given to cross-examine the witness. While, however, disallowing the prayer to put in the deposition, the learned Judge directed that portions of the statement itself as recorded by the Sub-Inspector in which the names of the "deceased's assailants were mentioned, might go in on the ground that some of the witnesses had deposed to those statements as having been made by the deceased in their presence to the Sub-Inspector: Held, (1) that the Judge acted erroneously in admitting portions of the statement in evidence as the dying declaration was wholly inadmissible; (2) that the deposition of the Sub-Inspector was admissible under S. 33, Evidence Act, as the defence had an opportunity of cross-examining him, though they did not avail themselves of it. *Tafiz Pramanik v. When the statement of a witness previously,

A previous statement which is not made in Court and at the trial, can be used only for the limited purpose of corroborating or contradicting a witness and does not become substantive evidence in the case. *Niamat Khan v. -----S. 32 (1)—Dying declaration—Admissibility under S. 32—The way in which it should be proved indicated.

Dying declaration of a deceased person is admissible under S. 32 (1), Evidence Act. The only satisfactory and reliable way of proving the dying declaration of a deceased person is to let the person who recorded it or in whose presence it was recorded directly prove the writing itself. Otherwise the proceedings would be reduced to a farce. No human being can be expected to remember word for word what he had written long ago and either the witness will have to learn the evidence by heart before he enters the witness-box or no dying declaration could be proved in a satisfactory manner at all. *Hanif Gul Rahim Gul v. Where a person died of pneumonia and there was no reason to connect the onset of pneumonia with the injuries inflicted on him: Held that a statement made by him before his death as to who his assailants were, was not admissible in evidence as a dying declaration. *Wali Mohammad v. Accused were charged with abetment of murder. Evidence of the conspiracy to commit murder was given by a witness A who was of bad character, and to corroborate his evidence, a statement made by the deceased several months before the murder as to the proposal of the accused to such witness to commit murder was sought to be proved. A gave evidence that the accused had approached him a week before murder to secure men for the purpose. The corroboration of this testimony was sought in the evidence of another witness B who deposed that on the morrow of the murder, A gave out to the people assembled near the dead that the accused had approached him to secure men for the purpose: Held, having regard to the fact that the statement was said to have been made months before the alleged murder, it could hardly come within the terms of S. 32 (1), Evidence Act. The evidence of B might be a corroboration of the fact that A had made that statement in the presence of others on the day following the murder, but was certainly not corroboration of A's statement that accused had approached him in the manner suggested. *Harendra Kumar Mandal v. The statement of a deceased person, so far as it is against the pecuniary or proprietary interest of that person, is admissible under Sub-s. (3), S. 32, Evidence Act, not only against that person but also against persons mentioned and referred to therein provided that the reference to such third persons is not foreign to that portion of the statement which is against the interest of the declarant. Although in cases of the above kind the whole statement of the deceased person is admissible in evidence, the value which the Court will attach to such evidence will depend in each case upon a variety of circumstances. If the statement happens to be recorded in a document, it must naturally possess greater value than when it depends upon the evidence of a witness who purports to have heard it. The Court in each case will also have to consider whether or not the statement in question bears on its face the appearances of truth, also the circumstances under which it came to be made, and whether or not the deceased person had motive in making it or an object in naming the particular person whom he charges with complicity in the crime in question. *Mohammad v.
